

REPORT

ON THE

CENSUS OF 1891.

VOLUME II.

The Castes of Marwar

PUBLISHED BY ORDER OF THE MARWAR DARBAR.

JODHPORE.

1894.

191

PREFACE.

It is always interesting to know something about the people with whom we have to deal and to learn their ways, manners and customs is an amusing task. The want of a book containing descriptions of the various tribes and castes of Marwar was long felt. No attempt has hitherto been made to undertake the work on account of the great many difficulties that attended its achievement. But the census of Marwar for 1891, the charge of which was entrusted to the undersigned, made the way clear and easy. The Darbar sanctioned the publication of such a work, and the census tours made throughout the country for the purpose of inspecting the preliminary arrangements of the districts afforded suitable opportunities for the collection of the required material. The census Supervisors and Inspectors, as well as the Pargana Halkins were provided with a set of questions dealing with the chief points to enable them to collect information regarding the ways and other social circumstances of the people, but a good many facts were investigated through personal enquiries from trustworthy representatives of various communities. Many valuable references were also obtained from the Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan by Col. Tod, the Punjab Census Report of 1881 by Mr. Danziel Ibbetson, the Hindu tribes and castes by the Revd. M. A. Sherring, the Races of the North-Western Provinces by Sir Henry Elliot, the Memoir of Central India by Sir John Malcolm, the Indian castes by John Wilson, also the Gazetteers of Rajputana and several other publications, to the authors of all of which the undersigned owes a good deal of obligation.

The present work, though imperfect as it is in various ways, is intended to show a true picture of social life of the two and a half millions of people inhabiting this important territory of Marwar—the most ancient and famous land in Rajasthan. The same order and arrangement has been preserved throughout the work as observed in the compilation of the caste statistics prescribed by the Government.

Munshi Debi Parshad Munsiff, who acted as the Deputy Seperintendent of the Census, has taken great pains to collect material for the work.

The vast stock of information he possesses about the country has been placed at my disposal for which I am much obliged.

I must express my sense of appreciation of the services rendered in connection with the production of this work by Babu Raghbir Sahai, the clerk of the Secretariat Office, to whom it was entrusted from first to last, and who alone, in addition to his other office duties, has brought it to an end in a way highly creditable to him. He has a good knowledge of English and his style is admirable. I have much pleasure in bringing his valuable services to the notice of the Darbar.

JODHPORE:

1894.

MUNSHI HARDYAL SINGH, RAI BAHADUR,

Secretary to the Musahib Ala,

and

Census Superintendent of Marwar.

CONTENTS.

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
CHAPTER—I.
RESULTS OF THE CENSUS	1—16
Relative density	1
Relative proportion of urban and rural population ...	1
General tendency of the movement of population ...	1
Numerical relation between the population in 1891 and that of 1881	2
Causes of increase in population	2
Religions and religious sects	2
Age and sex	4
Distribution by ages of Hindus, Jains and Mohamedans ...	5
Infirmities	6—9
Distribution of each infirmity by caste	10—11
Birth-place	12
Distribution of each class of the castes	13—15
Occupation	15
CHAPTER—II.
THE RAJPUTS	17—32
Mnsalman Rajputs	18
Parda system	19
Sagpan	19
The funeral rites	23
Natrayat Rajputs	23
Rathor	25

SUBJECT.

PAGE.

Bhati ...	26
Chohan ...	27
Kuckhwaha ...	28
Sisodia ...	29
Punwar ...	29
Solankhi ...	30
Parihar ...	30
Tunwar ...	31
Jhala ...	32
Gujar ...	33
Jat ...	34
Desi-Musalman ...	36
Kaim-Khanis ...	37
Sindhi ...	38
MINOR AGRICULTURAL ...	39—43
Malis ...	39
Petal or Kalbi ...	41
Bishnoi ...	41
Sirvi ...	42
FOREST AND HILL TRIBES ...	43—55
Mewati ...	44
Mer ...	44
Mina ...	45
Bhils ...	49
Grassias ...	53

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
CHAPTER III.
CLASS B.—PROFESSIONAL	56—126
PRIESTS	56—84
Brahmans	56 to 80
Chheniāt ...	57
The Daima	58
The Gōur ...	59
The Gujar Gōur	59
The Pārik	59
The Khundelwal	60
The Sarsut	60
The Pushkarna	61
The Srimali Brahmans	66
The Pirohits	69
The Dakot	73
The Joshis	75
The Acharaj	76
Other Brahmuns	77—80
The Kanoujia Brahmans	77
The Sanadh Brahmans	78
The Palliwal Brahmans	79
The Sāyads	81
The Jatis ...	83

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
THE DEVOTEES	85—98
The Bairagis	86
The Sadhs	87 to 92
The Ramavat Sadhus	88
The Kumbhawat Sadhus	89
The Ram Sanehi Sadhus	89
The Niranjanni Sadhus	89
The Kabir Panthis	90
The Dadu Panthis	90
The Nanak Shai	92
The Jogis	92 to 93
The Sanyasis	94 to 95
The Samegin	95
The Dhundias	96
Fakirs	97 to 98
TEMPLE SERVANTS	99
GENEALOGISTS	100—108
The Charans	100
The Bhats	103
The Motisaras	106
The Rawals	107
The Mirasis	107
The Doms	108
WRITERS	109—118
The Kayasth	109
The Khattris	112

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
THE OSWALS	113 to 118
The Mohnot	114
The Bhandari	115
The Singhi	116
The Lodhá	116
The Mohta	117
MUSICIANS AND BALLAD RECITERS ...	119—121
The Dholis	119
The Dhadis	121
DANCERS AND SINGERS	122—124
The Hingras	122
Jagri Patars	123
The Bhagtan	123
The Kalawat	124
ACTORS AND MIMERS	125—126
The Bhand	125
CHAPTER IV.
CLASS C.—COMMERCIAL	126—139
TRADERS	126 to 136
✓ The Mahajan	127
The Saraogis	128
The Porwals	129
The Sri-Mal	131
The Sri-Simal	131
✓ The Maheshri	131

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
The Agarwal	132
The Bija-Bargi	134
The Sungá	135
The Bohras	135
PEDLARS	137
The Besati	137
CARRIERS	137—139
The Báldia	137
The Lohana	138
CHAPTER V.
CLASS D.—ARTIZANS AND VILLAGE MENIALS,	139—185
GOLD-SMITHS	140—141
The Sunar	140
BARBERS	141—142
The Nai	141
BLACK-SMITHS	143—144
The Lohar	143
CARPENTERS AND TURNERS	144—147
The Kharádi	144
The Lakherá	145
The Churigar	146
The Khati	146
BRASS AND COPPER-SMITHS	147—148
The Kaserá	147
TAILORS	148—149
The Darzi	148

SUBJECT.	PAGE.
DYERS AND WEAVERS	149—152
The Chhipá	150
The Rangrez	151
The Bandhárá	152
The Patwa	152
The Julaha	153
The Koli	153
WASHERMEN	154
The Dhobi	154
COTTON-CLEANERS	154—155
The Pinjára	154
SHEPHERDS AND WOOL-WEAVERS	155—157
The Ahir	156
The Ghosi	157
The Rehbari	157
OIL-PRESSERS	158—159
The Teli	158
The Ghanchi	159
POTTERS	159—163
The Kumbhars	159
SALT-WORKERS	163—164
The Kharol	163
GOLD-SMITHS REFUSE-COLLECTORS... ..	164
The Nyaria	164

S U B J E C T.	P A G E.
PALKI BEARERS, COOKS AND WATERMEN ...	165—167
The Kahār ...	165
The Bharbhunjā ...	166
The Bhatyara ...	167
The Bhishti ...	167
DISTILLERS ...	168
The Kalāl ...	168
BUTCHERS ...	169—170
The Kassai ...	169
The Khatik ...	169
LEATHER WORKERS ...	171—179
The Chamar ...	171
The Rehgar ...	172
The Mochi ...	173
The Bhambi ...	174
The Gurra ...	176
The Sargarah ...	177
The Kamarya ...	178
The Dabgar ...	179
SCAVENGERS ...	179—181
The Bhangi ...	179

S U B J E C T.	P A G E.
PERSONAL SERVICE	181—183
The Gola	181
The Nazar	183
LEAF-PLATE SELLERS	184
The Bari	184
BETEE-LEAF SELLERS	185
The Tamboli	185
PAINTERS	185
The Chitara	185
CHAPTER VI.
CLASS E.—VAGARANT MINOR ARTIZANS AND PERFORMERS	186—195
EARTH-WORKERS AND STONE SPLITTERS	186—188
The Beldar	186
The Silawat	187
KNIFE GRINDERS	189
The Saikalgar	189
BASKET MAKERS	189
The Ganehha	189

S U B J E C T.	P A G E.
HUNTERS AND FOWLERS ...	190—195
The Baoris ...	190
The Sansis ...	191
The Thoris ...	194
The Bagris ...	195
ACROBATS AND JUGGLERS ...	195—196
The Nat ...	195
CHAPTER VII.
CLASS F.—RACES AND NATIONALITIES ...	197—202
The Shekh ...	197
The Pathán ...	198
The Mughal ...	199
The Makrani ...	200
The Wilaiti ...	201
The Christian Converts ...	201
The Parsi ...	181
The Sikh ...	179

CENSUS OF 1891.

THE CASTES OF MARWAR,

CHAPTER I.

RESULTS OF THE CENSUS.

The people of Marwar were enumerated on the night of the 26th February 1891, simultaneously with the people of other provinces of the Indian Empire. The population enumerated amounted to 25,18,007 excluding half Sambhar. The area of Marwar being roughly 37,000 square miles, the relative density of population per square mile comes up to 68·05. The number of occupied houses being 5,04,115 and that of villages, 4,225, the average number of persons per house and per village therefore is 5·02 and 595 respectively.

Relative proportion of urban and rural population. Of the total population in Marwar, 10·60 is urban and 89·39 rural, as will appear from the following figures :—

Total population	25,18,007
Urban	2,67,066
Proportion of urban to total population	10·60
Rural population	22,50,941
Proportion of rural to total population	89·39

General tendency of the movement of population. The general tendency of the movement of population seems towards the main towns as by comparing the urban population of 1891 with that of 1881, there has been found an increase of 59,760 souls on the whole, which gives a percentage of 28·82 as under:—

Urban population of 1891	...	2,67,066
" " of 1881	...	2,07,306
Increase	...	59,760
Percentage of increase	...	28·82

In the towns of Sojat, Pali, Nagor, and Phalodi, the urban proportion for females is in excess over that for males, as shown below :—

	Males.	Females.
Sojat	6,060	6,564
Pali	8,535	8,615
Nagor	8,418	8,773
Phalodi	4,811	5,686

The causes of it might be attributed to the fact that a large portion of the male commercial population of the places has gone abroad to carry on their business, leaving their families at home.

CHAPTER I.

RESULTS OF THE CENSUS.

The people of Marwar were enumerated on the night of the 26th February 1891, simultaneously with the people of other provinces of the Indian Empire. The population enumerated amounted to 25,18,007 excluding half Sambhar. The area of Marwar being roughly 37,000 square miles, the relative density of population per square mile comes up to 68·05. The number of occupied houses being 5,04,115 and that of villages, 4,225, the average number of persons per house and per village therefore is 5·02 and 595 respectively.

Relative proportion of urban and rural population. Of the total population in Marwar, 10·60 is urban and 89·39 rural, as will appear from the following figures :—

Total population	25,18,007
Urban	2,67,066
Proportion of urban to total population	10·60
Rural population	22,50,941
Proportion of rural to total population	89·39

The general tendency of the movement of population seems towards the main towns as by comparing the urban population of 1891 with that of 1881, there has been found an increase of 59,760 souls on the whole, which gives a percentage of 28·82 as under:—

Urban population of 1891	...	2,67,066
“ “ of 1881	...	2,07,306
Increase	...	59,760
Percentage of increase	...	28·82

In the towns of Sojat, Pali, Nagor, and Phalodi, the urban proportion for females is in excess over that for males, as shown below:—

	Males.	Females.
Sojat	6,060	6,564
Pali	8,535	8,615
Nagor	8,418	8,773
Phalodi	4,811	5,686

The causes of it might be attributed to the fact that a large portion of the male commercial population of the places has gone abroad to carry on their business, leaving their families at home.

Numerical relation between the population in 1891 and that of 1881.

The following figures will show the numerical relation between the population in 1891, and that in 1881.

		1891.	1881.	Increase.
Males	...	13,23,776	9,60,609	3,63,167
Females	...	11,94,231	7,74,362	4,19,869
Total	25,18,007	17,34,971	7,83,036

The percentage of increase over the population of 1881 as calculated on the male figures comes up to 37·8.

The causes of increase in population since the last census are chiefly due to the fact that the people in general have been fortunate enough to enjoy every peace and tranquility. There was no outbreak of famine during the last 10 years, and the period was marked with general prosperity of the country, owing to the several reforms, introduced in the State in connection with the equal administration of justice to all classes of the people, the extirpation of marauding bands and the gradual inducement of the criminal tribes to agricultural pursuits.

Another reason of the marked increase in population may be attributed to the various deficiencies of the previous census, which was not a synchronous one, and of which the required records were not completely secured.

As all the figures under each religion could not be obtained from the records of the last census, the following statement will show the variation by sexes in the case of Hindus, Janis, and Mohamedans only, for which the respective figures of the last census, have been taken from the Rajputana census report of 1881.

Religions.		Previous census.	Present census.	Increase or decrease.	Percentage of increase or decrease.
Hindus	... { Males ...	8,01,280	11,48,753	3,47,473	43·36
	... { Females,	6,20,611	10,23,647	4,03,036	64·94
	... { Total ...	14,21,891	21,72,400	7,50,509	52·77
Janis	... { Males ...	87,010	79,732	-7,278	-8·36
	... { Females,	85,394	87,464	2,070	2·42
	... { Total ...	1,72,404	1,67,196	-5,208	-3·02
Mohamedans,	... { Males ...	80,630	95,106	14,476	17·95
	... { Females,	75,172	83,047	7,815	10·47
	... { Total ...	1,55,802	1,78,153	22,351	14·34

It will be observed that the results of the present census show an increase of 52·77 per cent among the Hindus and of 14·34 per cent among the Mohomedans, while there has been a decrease of 3·02 per cent among the Janis.

The figures given below show the proportion by sexes of each religion to the total population as returned in the present census:—

			Number.	Average on total population.
Total population of 1891.	{ Males	...	13,23,776
	{ Females	...	11,94,231
	{ Total	...	25,18,007
Hindus.	{ Males	...	11,48,753	86·77
	{ Females	...	10,23,647	85·71
	{ Total	...	21,72,400	86·27
Janis.	{ Males	...	79,732	6·02
	{ Females	...	87,464	7·32
	{ Total	...	1,67,196	6·64
Mohamedans.	{ Males	...	95,106	7·18
	{ Females	...	83,047	6·95
	{ Total	...	1,78,153	7·07
Sikhs.	{ Males	...	20	·006
	{ Females	...	10	·0001
	{ Total	...	30	·001
Aryas.	{ Males	...	101	·007
	{ Females	...	34	·002
	{ Total	...	135	·005
Parsis.	{ Males	...	21	·001
	{ Females	...	17	·001
	{ Total	...	38	·001
Christians.	{ Males	...	43	·003
	{ Females	...	12	·001
	{ Total	...	55	·002

The gross results are:—Of the total population, about 86·27 per cent are Hindus, 6·64 per cent are Janis, and 7·07 per cent are Mohamedans.

The proportion in the case of the remaining religions stands thus:—

Sikhs	·001 per cent.
Aryas	·005 "
Parsis	·001 "
Christians	·002 "

The statement given below is meant to show the comparison of the two sexes at each age period, in the form of the number of females per 1,000 males of each age:—

Age period.	Total Males.	Total Females.	Averag number of Females per 1,000 Males.
Infant.	53,697	55,523	1,034
1	19,751	17,374	879
2	40,069	36,952	922
3	47,757	44,083	923
4	46,565	43,958	944
5—9	1,95,820	1,74,784	892
10—14	1,57,494	1,38,022	876
15—19	96,452	81,221	842
20—24	95,151	88,050	925
25—29	1,04,071	87,356	839
30—34	1,09,833	95,396	868
35—39	69,077	55,157	798
40—44	81,512	76,509	938
45—49	49,101	43,222	880
50—54	63,361	58,649	925
55—59	31,378	25,326	807
60 and over	62,687	72,649	1,158
Total ...	13,23,776	11,94,231	902

Distribution by ages of Hindus Jains and Mohamedans.

The following statement will show the distribution by ages of Hindus, Jains and Mohamedans;—

Age period.	HINDUS.		JAINS.		MOHAMEDANS.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Infants.	45,711	47,612	4,138	4,065	3,845	3,842
1	17,270	15,164	1,246	1,034	1,234	1,175
2	34,621	32,083	2,606	2,382	2,839	2,485
3	41,978	38,374	2,503	2,548	3,272	3,160
4	40,606	38,109	2,523	2,509	3,431	3,336
5—9	1,70,232	1,51,172	11,543	11,193	13,939	12,411
10—14	1,37,597	1,19,999	8,754	9,321	11,111	8,693
15—19	83,606	68,863	5,660	7,013	7,165	5,343
20—24	82,325	74,477	5,390	6,820	7,415	6,741
25—29	90,128	74,122	5,201	6,919	8,117	6,310
30—34	95,693	80,682	6,173	7,562	7,942	7,140
35—39	59,496	46,569	4,839	4,797	4,729	3,786
40—44	70,994	64,977	4,626	5,760	5,884	5,767
45—49	42,442	37,282	3,753	3,515	2,895	2,424
50—54	55,128	50,167	3,732	4,318	4,496	4,162
55—59	27,507	21,853	2,181	2,231	1,687	1,242
60 & over	53,419	62,142	4,164	5,177	5,103	5,030
Total ...	11,48,753	10,23,647	79,732	87,464	95,106	83,047

INFIRMITIES.

(α)—The following statements will show the distribution by age period of 1,000 afflicted:—

INSANE.

Age.	MALES.		FEMALES.
	Total number.	Proportion to total number of sex per 1,000.	Total number.	Proportion to total number of sex per 1,000.
0—4	3	5	5	16
5—9	39	73	29	96
10—14	48	89	19	65
15—19	45	84	22	73
20—24	51	95	20	66
25—29	54	101	28	93
30—34	67	125	25	83
35—39	32	59	22	73
40—44	61	114	28	93
45—49	26	48	18	59
50—54	40	74	25	83
55—59	23	43	10	33
60 and over	45	84	50	164
Total ...	534	...	301	...

BLIND.

0—4	63	12	69	9
4—9	401	77	294	39
10—14	291	96	214	28
15—19	175	33	160	21
20—24	220	42	180	23
25—29	238	45	264	35
30—34	310	59	382	50
35—39	232	44	288	38
40—44	361	69	579	77
45—49	283	54	416	55
50—54	521	100	774	103
55—59	319	61	524	69
60 & over	1,781	342	3,361	447
Total ...	5,195	...	7,505	...

LEPERS.

Age.	MALES.		FEMALES.
	Total Lepers.	Proportion to total number of sex per 1,000 Lepers.	Total Lepers.	Proportion to total number of sex per 1,000 Lepers.
0—4	4	9	3	24
5—9	17	41	4	33
10—14	11	26	5	41
15—19	16	38	5	41
20—24	24	58	8	66
25—29	18	43	8	66
30—34	46	111	16	132
35—39	35	84	14	115
40—44	61	147	16	132
45—49	36	87	7	57
50—54	50	121	17	140
55—59	16	38	4	33
60 & over	79	191	14	115
Total ...	413	...	121	...

EUNUCHS.

Age.	MALES.
	Total Eunuchs.	Proportion to total number of sex per 1,000 Eunuchs.
0—4
5—9	2	16
10—14	2	16
15—19	1	8
20—24	4	32
25—29	11	88
30—34	27	216
35—39	10	80
40—44	19	152
45—49	8	64
50—54	11	88
55—59	7	56
60 & over	23	184
Total ...	125	...

(b)--The following statements will show the proportion of the afflicted to the total number of that sex at each age period.

MALES.

Age.	Total number of sex.	INSANE.		BLIND,		LEPERS.		EUNUCHS.
		Total number.	Proportion per 1,000 at each age period.	Total number.	Proportion per 1,000 at each age period.	Total number.	Proportion per 1,000 at each age period.	Total number.	Proportion per 1,000 at each age period.
0—4	2,07,839	3	·01	63	·3	4	·01
5—9	1,95,820	39	·19	401	2·04	17	·08	2	·01
10—14	1,57,494	48	·3	291	1·74	11	·06	2	·01
15—19	96,452	45	·46	175	1·83	16	·16	1	·01
20—24	95,151	51	·53	220	2·31	24	·25	4	·04
25—29	1,04,071	54	·51	238	2·31	18	·17	11	·1
30—34	1,09,833	67	·61	310	2·83	46	·41	27	·24
35—39	69,077	32	·46	232	3·48	35	·61	10	·14
40—44	81,512	61	·74	361	4·42	61	·74	19	·23
45—49	49,101	26	·5	283	5·76	36	·73	8	·16
50—54	63,361	40	·63	521	8·22	50	·78	11	·17
55—59	31,378	23	·73	319	10·16	16	·82	7	·22
60 & over	62,687	45	·7	1,781	28·47	79	·26	23	·36
Total ...	13,23,776	534	...	5,195	...	413	...	125	...

FEMALES.

0—4	1,97,890	5	·2	69	·34	3	·01
5—9	1,74,784	29	·16	294	1·61	4	·02
10—14	1,38,022	19	·13	214	1·55	5	·03
15—19	81,221	22	·27	160	1·96	5	·06
20—24	88,050	20	·22	180	2·04	8	·09
25—29	87,356	28	·33	264	3·02	8	·09
30—34	95,396	25	·26	382	4·04	16	·16
35—39	55,157	22	·39	288	5·22	14	·25
40—44	76,509	28	·36	579	7·56	16	·2
45—49	43,222	18	·41	416	9·62	7	·16
50—54	58,049	25	·42	774	13·19	17	·29
55—59	25,326	10	·43	524	20·68	4	·15
60 & over	72,649	50	·68	3,361	46·26	14	·19
Total ...	11,94,231	301	...	7,505	...	121	...

(c.)—The following statement will show the proportion (per 100) of females to males afflicted at each age period.

Age.	INSANE.			BLIND.			LEPERS.
	Males.	Females.	Proportion (per 100) of females to males.	Males.	Females.	Proportion (per 100) of females to males.	Males.	Females.	Proportion (per 100) of females to males.
0—4	3	5	166	63	69	109	4	3	75
5—9	39	29	74	401	294	73	17	4	23
10—14	48	19	39	291	214	73	11	5	45
15—19	45	22	48	175	160	91	16	5	31
20—24	51	20	39	220	180	81	24	8	33
25—29	54	28	51	238	264	110	18	8	44
30—34	67	25	37	310	382	123	46	16	34
35—39	32	22	68	232	288	124	35	14	40
40—44	61	28	45	361	579	160	61	16	26
45—49	26	18	69	283	416	146	36	7	19
50—54	40	25	62	521	774	148	50	17	34
55—59	23	10	43	319	524	164	16	4	25
60 & over	45	50	111	1,781	3,361	188	79	14	17
Total ...	534	301	56	5,195	7,505	144	413	121	29

Distribution of each infirmity by caste.

The following statements will show the proportion of the afflicted to the total strength of the caste, by sexes.

Caste.	MALES.
	Total number of caste.	BLIND.		INSANE.		LEPERS.		EUNUCHS.
		Number.	Proportion to total number.	Number.	Proportion to total number.	Number.	Proportion to total number.	Number.	Proportion to total number.
Rajput ...	1,38,342	403	2	55	4	46	33	13	009
Mahajan ...	1,07,000	705	6	52	48	40	37	1	009
Brahman ...	1,10,481	546	4	50	45	37	33	6	05
Jat ...	1,71,881	452	2	49	28	51	2	7	04
Kumhar ...	26,419	218	8	33	1.24	23	87	5	18
Mali ...	32,204	65	2	11	34	7	2	3	09
Kayasth ...	2,877	11	3	3	1.04	1	03	1	34
Sadh ...	26,568	186	6	20	75	9	3	2	07
Charan ...	11,502	126	10	9	78	8	69
Bhil ...	36,482	220	6	17	46	18	4	3	08
Chaker ...	31,691	120	4	18	56	14	44	2	06
Musalman ...	95,106	234	2	45	47	11	11	30	31
Mina ...	12,215	156	12	6	49	4	32	2	16
Bhambi ...	1,01,273	123	1	10	009	12	11	1	009
Gujar ...	13,125	35	2
Darzi ...	8,833	30	3	1	11
Thori ...	8,204	67	8	3	36	1	12
Chhipa ...	2,025	1	49
Baori ...	10,353	108	10	9	87	8	77
Khati ...	26,958	71	2	2	07

Caste.	FEMALES.
	Total number of caste.	BLIND.		INSANE.		LEPERS.
		Number.	Proportion to total number.	Number.	Proportion to total number.	Number.	Proportion to total number.
Bajput ...	1,06,221	570	5	20	·25	9	·08
Mahajan ...	1,25,351	940	7	31	·18	5	·03
Brahman ...	1,00,915	781	7	28	·27	7	·06
Jat ...	1,43,562	651	4	36	·25	14	·09
Kumhar ...	24,697	259	10	16	·64	7	·28
Mali ...	28,015	105	3	2	·07	7	·24
Kayasth ...	3,278	7	2	1	·33
Sadh ...	25,471	213	8	5	·19	4	·15
Charan ...	9,924	156	45	7	·7	1	·1
Bhil ...	30,480	286	9	8	·26	4	·13
Chaker ...	28,738	203	7	13	·45	2	·06
Musalman ...	83,047	330	3	22	·26	3	·03
Mina ...	11,553	165	13	2	·17	1	·08
Bhambi ...	81,809	172	2	3	·03	2	·02
Gujar ...	12,319	44	3
Darzi ...	8,123	36	4	1	·12	3	·36
Thori ...	7,042	57	8	1	·14
Chhipa ...	1,882	49	20
Baori ...	10,979	138	12	4	·36
Khati ...	22,515	37	1	2	·08

Birth place.

The following is the distribution of the total population under each class, as regards birth place.

Born in Marwar.

Males	12,93,877
Females	11,50,394
Total				24,44,271

Born in the states within the province of Rajputana.

Males	17,658
Females	29,821
Total				47,479

Born in districts or states contiguous to the province of Rajputana.

Males	8,259
Females	10,337
Total				18,596

Born in other provinces or states in India.

Males	3,949
Females	3,625
Total				7,574

Born in other Asiatic countries beyond India.

Males	33
Females	54
Total				87

The results show that out of the total population, about 97·07 per cent are those born in Marwar alone, while the immigration from beyond the limits of Marwar territory gives an average of 2·92 souls, out of every 100. Of this immigration, about 1·09 per cent comes from the states within the province of Rajputana, while the proportional figures for that from the states or districts contiguous, as well as, remote to Rajputana, come up to ·3 and ·003 per cent respectively. The immigration from other Asiatic countries outside India, being confined to Kabul only, is quite insignificant.

Caste.

The distribution of each class of the castes is shown below:—

Class A.—Agricultural.

Males	5,28,712
Females	4,49,091
Total				9,77,803

Class B.—Professional.

Males	3,08,737
Females	2,94,230
Total				6,02,967

Class C.—Commerical.

Males	47,328
Females	52,704
Total				1,00,032

Class D.—Artizan and Village Menial.

Males	3,79,090
Females	3,45,942
Total				7,25,032

Class E.—Vagavant, Minor Artizans and Performers.

Males	37,316
Females	36,176
Total				73,492

Class F.—Races and Nationalities

Males	22,593
Females	16,088
Total				38,681

The following statement will show the relative strength of the main castes in Marwar.

Caste.	Religion.	STRENGTH.
		Males.	Females.	Total.
Rajput	Hindu ...	1,38,342	1,06,221	2,44,563
Gujar	Do. ...	13,125	12,319	25,444
Jat	Do. ...	1,71,881	1,43,562	3,15,443
Brahman	Do. ...	1,10,481	1,00,915	2,11,396
Mahajan	Hindu & Jain	1,07,000	1,25,351	2,32,351
Mali	Hindu ...	32,204	28,015	60,219
Bishnoi	Do. ...	21,015	19,008	40,023
Sirvi	Do. ...	29,328	26,429	55,757
Kalbi	Do. ...	11,895	15,370	27,265
Mina	Do. ...	12,215	11,553	23,768
Bhil	Do. ...	36,482	30,480	66,962
Girasia	Do. ...	2,123	1,917	4,040
Charan	Do. ...	11,502	9,924	21,426
Bhat	Do. ...	12,604	9,955	22,559
Sonar	Do. ...	11,802	11,410	23,212
Nai	Do. ...	777	690	1,467
Lohar	Do. ...	8,000	7,150	15,150

Caste.	Religion.	STRENGTH.
		Males.	Females.	Total.
Khati ...	Hindu ...	26,958	22,515	49,473
Darzi ...	Do. ...	8,833	8,123	16,956
Kumhar...	Do. ...	26,419	24,697	51,116
Chamar ..	Do. ...	24,973	21,037	46,010
Bhanbi ...	Do. ...	1,01,273	81,809	1,83,082
Baori ...	Do. ...	10,353	10,979	21,332
Moghul ...	Mohamedan	729	753	1,482
Sheikh ...	Do. ...	16,782	11,720	28,502
Pathan ...	Do. ...	4,871	3,500	8,371
Parsi	21	17	38
Christian Converts	...	43	12	55
Sikh	20	10	22

The comparison of the number of males and females contained in each class of occupation is shown as under:—

	Males.	Females.	Difference.
Class A.—Government.	47,917	36,380	11,537
Class B.—Pasture and Agriculture.	7,60,540	6,69,308	91,232
Class C.—Personal Service.	53,261	41,358	11,903
Class D.—The preparation & supply of material substances.	1,90,282	1,81,519	8,763

	Males.	Females.	Difference.
Class E.—Commerce, the transport of persons and messages, and the storage of goods. }	1,82,086	1,81,742	344
Class F.—Professions learned, artistic and minor. }	19,231	18,459	772
Class G.—Indefinite occupations and means of subsistence independent of occupation. }	70,459	65,465	4,994

INDUSTRY.—There is very little to be said about the industry of Marwar, firstly because the industrial class do not predominate; secondly because the industry is confined to common things the chief industrial product being ivory work, pottery, dying sewing and work of a goldsmith, blacksmith, bell metal workers and tailors.

Some of the parganas such as Malani, Sanchor, Shergarh, Sheo and Sankra, depend on other parganas for their common industrial supplies, but Bali, Nagor, Merta, Jodhpur and Didwana are advanced, and meet the wants of the aforesaid parganas. The rural population on the other hand is specially backward in this respect.

AGRICULTURISTS.—The purely agricultural group in Marwar excluding the pastoral community bears the largest proportion to the total population, i. e. out of 25,18,007 souls 13,00,310 persons belong to that class, of which 81,264 are urban and 12,19,046 are rural.

In the eastern parganas, as well as in those that lie south to the Luni river, where there are generally two crops, this class is found in larger number and is comparatively wealthier than those in the western parganas of Sanchor, Malani, Sheo and Sankra, where the people generally have only one crop, depending only on the rain-fall and in time of famine, are the first to emigrate.

CHAPTER II.

THE RAJPUTS.

THE Rajputs form the chief military and dominant class in Marwar, and stand highest in the list of castes as regards their numerical importance, bearing a proportion of 9·71 per cent to the total population, and of 11·25 per cent to the total number of Hindus.

The statement given below will shew the number of several Rajput clans that are found in Marwar.

Name.		Males.	Females.	Total.
Rathores	...	56,637	30,203	86,840
Bhati	...	15,171	11,983	27,154
Chohan	...	13,856	11,933	25,789
Kuchhwaya	...	5,489	8,489	13,928
Sisodia	...	4,864	8,755	13,619
Punwar	...	5,899	5,219	11,118
Solunkhi	...	3,790	3,233	7,023
Parihar	...	3,386	3,019	6,405
Tunwar	...	1,116	890	2,006
Jhala	...	118	88	206
Others	...	28,016	22,459	50,475
Total	...	1,38,342	1,06,221	2,44,563

The Rajputs have been the ruling race of India, from time immemorial, and are therefore termed Rajputs or the sons of Rajas. Formerly, they were also known by the name of Kshatriyas, and belonged to the two ancient Solar and Lunar dynasties. The former ruled at Ajudhia, and the latter at Piryag (now Allahabad). Generations flitted by—till after the great Mahabharata war, when the foreign inroads ravaged the country, the two families lost their power, and the spread of Buddhism in India added more to their weakness. Other castes rose and occupied the kingdoms founded by the Rajputs. To get rid of these usurpers, the Bashisht Muni and other Rishis, as is commonly believed, performed the ceremonies of "Jag" at Abu, and produced Agnibansi Rajputs from Agnikund. It formed the third dynasty of Rajputs, which dates its origin to a period nearly 2,500 years back. It consisted chiefly of Punwars, Chohans, Solunkhis, and Parihars. The ancient dynasties of Soorajbansi and Chundarbansi Rajputs also revived, and their various branches, such as Rathores, Sisodias, and Kuchhwayas, and Tunwars, Bhatias, and Jarichas, established their authority in Gujrat and Rajputana. Many branches of Punwars, Chohans, Solunkhis and Parihars are also found in Marwar, as noted below; some of them are mere cultivators, but a few still possess a very small portion of land, and are called Bhomias.

Punwars—(1) Sodha, (2) Sankhla, (3) Bhayal.

Chohans—(1) Sonugra (2) Sanchora (4) Deora & (4) Borah

Solunkhis—(1) Bagela (2) Balote.

Parihars—(1) Eenda.

MUSALMAN RAJPUTS.

(There are also some Musalman Rajputs in Marwar, numbering about 22,437. They are called Musalman-Sepahis, but only nominally so, as they scarcely differ in their customs and manners from the Hindu Rajputs. They are, for the most part, the Bhatias and Chohans, who were forced into conversion during the Mohamedan period, and are generally found in the western and eastern parts of the country. The Bhati Musalmans whose conversion dates from the time of Shahab-ud-din Ghori up to the end of Aurangzeb's reign (1193-1684), are called Sindhi-Sepahis, and the Chohans who were made Musalman by Ferozshah Tuglak in about 1383 A. D., are known by the name of Kaim-Khanis. Their total number in Marwar is 4133.)

There are three things in which chiefly, consists the honor of the Rajputs, viz., (1) the possession of land (2) the parda system of females, and (3) a good "Sagpan" or high matrimonial alliance. The Rajputs attach a very high value to the possession of land, and their position varies, in proportion to the quantity of land, they hold. They are, on no account, willing to part with their land, even at the risk of their life. Colonel Tod refers to Manu, who says "the Rajputs may part with wife to preserve their land," but seeing the general tendency of the people, we should make no restriction in the matter, and quote an old saying, current in Marwar, to which the Rajputs still adhere to the very letter.

Dhan jātān Dharā Palat tāt, Tiryā Paruntān Tāo—Teen Divus yeh marunrā, kiyā Rājā kiyā Rāo.

i. e. when either, property, or land, or a wife, is lost, these are the three occasions for a Rajput to die, whether he be a Raja or a Rao.

There are several classes of land-holding Rajputs in Marwar, in accordance to the rate of rent, they are required to pay:—

(1)—Tenants i. e. those who pay rent to the Raj or Jagirdar, at the rate paid by common cultivators.

(2)—Mukata payers—i. e. those paying rent in one fixed sum, which is generally less than the usual rate.

(3)—Dumba-payers or those who pay very small amount of rent by way of Istamar.

(4)—Bhomias or those who do not pay any rent for their land.

(5)—Juna-Jagirdars, who enjoy some fields in return of a certain Jagir previously held by them.

(6)—Jagirdars or Sirdars &c.

Those Rajputs, who do not hold land, have no importance at all in their family circle, and are considered as mere sepoy's leading a life of dependence on their Zemindar brethren, who even refrain from eating together with them. Such Rajputs are called Hulkhair or Ghar-ka-Dhanea.

PARDA SYSTEM.

The seclusion of women is maintained with severe strictness by the Rajputs. It is best observed by those, who are owners of land, and can afford the necessary privacy. The females of the poorer classes, however, cannot adhere to it very strictly, and can fetch water from the wells, or supply meals to their husbands on fields.

"SAGPAN."

The Rajputs take a great pride in having a high matrimonial alliance, but this can only be possible in the case of a well-to-do man. The poorer the man is, the lower becomes his connection in this respect, so much so, that he is gradually reduced to the level of a Natrayat Rajput. But if he improves his means of subsistence, or happens to become a rich Zemindar, his social status is raised, and he can marry the daughters of his relations, who refused him once, without even giving any of his, in return.

The Rajputs of Marwar, are fine-looking tall and strongly-constituted men, simple and affable in their manners, and have no prejudices in religious matters, as is the case with the Rajputs of eastern India. They are kind and obliging, but when they turn out Barotias, they become as cruel as possible, and are ready to commit the most dreadful atrocious acts. The characteristics of Rajputs are best told in their traditions. The deeds of chivalrous gallantry and the acts of resolute heroism performed by the Rajput heroes and heroines, in times of yore, are well known in the annals of India, and need not be reiterated here.

The Rajputs of the eastern parganas seem to be more advanced than their western brethren. Almost all the principal Jagirdars and Sirdars reside in the eastern part of the country. They are intelligent and neatly dressed, and have good pucca houses to reside in. The Rajputs of the western parganas are, on the contrary, plain and simple. Their houses are no better than huts of mud thatched with straw. They are usually found in dirty clothes, and are consequently designated by the title of Maili-Pachhe-wari i. e. those who wear dirty clothes.

The use of strong-drink is very common among the Rajputs in which "they drown their old enmities." "It is the free use of this, and similar indulgences," says Colonel Tod, "prohibited by ordinances which govern the ordinary Hindu, that first induced me to believe that these warlike races were little indebted to India." It is generally consumed, in the eastern part of Marwar, but opium is chiefly used in the western parganas. It is resorted to, on every occasion, both of joy and sorrow. It is a custom, that if the two] persons who are at variance with each other, exchange opium from the hands of one another, the old grudge at once disappears, and the parties become reconciled once for all. The use of leathern pipes or "chamar-posh" forms not the less interesting thing, in some pleasure parties of the opium-eating Rajputs, and has equally been a pleasing subject of versification, for the Charans and Bhats, to recite on such occasions.

The mode of succession among the common Rajputs of Marwar (cultivators or bhominas) is by an equal division of the property among the sons of the deceased. In some cases, the division is made in consideration of the number of wives, and not of the sons, as for instance, if a person has five sons—two from one wife, and three from the other—the whole property is to be divided into two equal portions, instead of into five, and given to the sons of their respective mothers. Among the principal Sirdars and Jagirdars, the law of primogeniture is observed, and in case of there being no issue, adoption is made from the nearest relations.

The Rajput can have more than one wife. When a girl is once betrothed, the marriage is deemed indispensable, as the proverb says :—

"Koari nahin chhoote, biyahi chhootjai"—i. e. it is possible to divorce a married wife, but not a betrothed girl.

A Rajput can also marry in any clan, excepting only the "goth" of his father, and has no hesitation like other castes of Hindus, in eating at the house of his son-in-law. He can even marry the daughter of his own clan's daughter, provided the father's goth is excluded. Thus a daughter of a Mertia Rathore if married to a Kuchhlwaya Rajput, can give her daughter in marriage to a Rathore of Champawat or Kunpawat Khamp.

The proper age for marriage among the Rajputs is, when the parties attain to puberty. But in some cases, the daughter is to wait for a still longer period, if the father is a victim to poverty, or if the desired alliance is not available. The girls are not called in their husband's house, by their own name, but by the name of their families' clans, as Chohanji, Rathoreji &c.

The system of intermarriages is also very prominent among the Rajputs. Giving daughters in marriage is considered to be a source of reconciliation to the families concerned, however an old and bitter enmity might be existing between them, and the number of daughters thus given, can fairly compensate an equal number of murders committed by the members of the brides' family.

It will not be out of place to give here some brief description of the ceremonies, that are in vogue among the Rajputs of Marwar, in connection with the betrothals and marriages.

Betrothals are usually contracted by the parents of the bride and bridegroom, through a Charan or Bhat, and when it is verbally agreed upon, the father of the girl sends a Tika for the bridegroom which consists of some clothes and raw cacaoanuts, and in the case of a well-to-do man, of horses, silver and gold coins, as well as clothes for servants and kamdars. The father of the bridegroom on the other hand distributes opium and raw sugar to his relations and friends, in whose presence the Brahman, accompanying the Tika, marks Tilak on the forehead of the bridegroom and puts all the things in his hand. The father of the bridegroom then entertains the party and distributes sugar to the Nais and Chakars. It is not customary for the father of the bride to accompany the Tika, though some of its relations may do so in special cases.

After betrothal is contracted, there is no limit of time for the performance of marriage. It depends on the option of the contracting parties. However, when the times of the various marriage ceremonies are specified, they are recorded on a piece of paper by the family Jotshi. It is called Lagan and is sent to the father of the bridegroom.

After the Lagan is fixed, the marriage ceremonies commence. Invitations are sent to the friends and relations to join the marriage on a piece of coloured paper called Kunkumpatri. The bride and bridegroom enjoy what may be called in the language of the country Bindola-Bethna. Feasts are given, by turns to the bride's and bridegroom's party by their respective relations and friends.

A few days before the marriage, the ceremony of applying oil called Tel chharhana is observed. It is performed by a female member of the family. In fixing the days for this purpose, consideration is usually paid to the distance of the bride's house. In some cases the bride's father after consultation with the Jotshi notifies the number of days for the purpose. A thread called Kankandori is usually tied on the right wrist and leg of the bridegroom. Then comes the ceremony of collecting Neota and the bridegroom takes his seat on a chair amidst the friends and relations, servants and ryots, who pay the Neota in coins varying from Re. 1 to 100. The next ceremony is that of the marriage-procession. The bridegroom, being richly dressed, wears Sehra (wreath worn on the head at the time of marriage) and Mohr which form the chief requisites of the occasion, and rides on a horse, camel or Tonga, and in some cases, on an elephant too, while his relations and friends accompany him, preceded by musicians and dancing girls. A set of rich dress with bankles and Mohr is taken for the bride, with the exception of ornaments, which are given by the bride's father, but if the latter cannot afford to it, they are supplied by the bridegroom's father when the bride is taken home.

The reception of the marriage procession by the members of the bride's family is called Panjan which usually takes place at a short distance from the bride's house or village. In some places of Marwar, a very amusing game is played on this occasion. When both the parties meet, they set their horses and camels in a race. If the bridegroom's companions win the game, the other party has to pay a minimum sum of Rs. 5 but nothing is to be paid, if the bride's relations turn out victorious. Both the parties then sit and drink together and partake of opium. This custom is called Samela. The bridegroom then proceeds with a spear in his hand to touch the Toran which is hung on the door of the bride's house.

At this time the pole-pat barhut is paid. It is a sort of fee (neg) given to the Charans of the bride's party, according to one's position. It usually consists of a horse; but in some cases money is also given with it. It is termed Barhut from the fact that the Charans usually insist much for its payment at the door. The same significance has the word pole-pat which literally means those who put up at the door.

The bridegroom is then taken by the Brahman to the Chouri, a place where the marriage actually takes place. Among other Hindus, he is generally conducted to this place by his mother-in-law by the nose, but it is not customary with the Rajputs. It is at this time that the ceremony of applying oil to the bride is performed. It is not done unless the bridegroom arrives at the Chouri. If chance fares it otherwise, the girl has not to wait any longer and can be married to some other person, for according to the common saying—Tirya tel hamirhut charhe na duji bar—this ceremony in the case of a bride cannot be done more than once,

Then comes the time for marriage, the Brahmans burn fire in the centre of the house, and invoke the family dieties by repeating the sacred muntras, while the females sing the songs peculiar to the occasion. The bridegroom and the bride walk together 4 times round the fire. For the first three times, the bridegroom precedes the bride, and on the fourth, follows her, which concludes the marriage. It is not absolutely necessary with the father of the bride to be present on the scene at this occasion as is the case with other Hindus. The bride follows her husband in a palanquin or ruth, to the halting place, but returns back a short after; and the bridegroom's party is then feasted.

The next day Tyag is distributed to the Charans and Bhats. What Bhurshi-Dukshna is to the Brahmans, the Tyag is to the Charans and Bhats; the difference being only that the former do not insist much and are content to receive what is given to them, but the Charans, on the other hand, prove to be extremely teasing and troublesome. They consider the payment as their right. The Dukshna is given to the Brahmans by every Hindu but the Tyag is paid to the Charans and Bhats by the Rajputs only. It would seem tedious to dwell much on the subject. Suffice it to say that in place of the great irregularity and extravagance which hitherto prevailed, proper rates are now fixed for the payment of Tyag and rules are laid down for guidance.

After the marriage is finished, the party takes leave and the bride accompanies her husband to his home amidst the great rejoicings of his relations and friends. The bride does not long remain with her husband at this time. She has to return once to her father's house and then taken back again by her husband to live with him as a wife.

THE FUNERAL RITES.

The funeral rites among the Rajputs do not differ much from those of the other Hindus, the only exception being that in some cases the dead body is often carried in Bekunti in a sitting position and is burnt in the same posture.

The fire is set to the funeral pile by the eldest son of the deceased or by any of his relations or Pirohīts. Opium is distributed to the relations who come to pay visits of condolence, Mokan-Jana or Bethne-Jana are the common terms in Marwar that convey the sense of paying such visits, but in the District of Malani, a very strange phrase viz. Hukka bharne jana is also used to serve the purpose.

Other ceremonies are exactly the same as among other Hindus. On the third day, the bones are picked up and sent to Hardawar. Ashes are thrown in the Pushkar.

No food is cooked on the sad day at the house of the deceased. It is supplied by the relations. On the twelfth day Mosar is performed, when all the relations and friends are fed, who in return give turbans to the eldest son of the deceased. Neota is also realized on the occasion. In Malani, as well as in other western parganas of Marwar, it is called Khand-bar. In the case of Jagirdars, the Mahajans and cultivators also have to pay it.

NATRAYAT-RAJPUTS.

The Natrayat-Rajputs are those who allow widow-marriage. They belong to the clans of Punwar, Chohan, Bhati, Sisodia, Parihar, Solunkhi, Rathor, &c. and are found residing generally in the districts of Pali, Bali, Jalor, Sanchor, Mallani &c. The Natrayat-Rajputs are considered as a low class, by their high caste members, who do not eat or drink with them, nor allow them to smoke with the same pipe. The high caste Rajputs are called, the Zemindars and Sirdars, and the Natrayats are termed "Rajputs." They do not observe the "parda-system." Their women generally go out to fetch water, and supply meals to their husbands on fields. The manners and customs of Natrayat-Rajputs are much like those of rude people. In some places, especially in Siwana, they are called "Chorasias," from the fact that they receive a sum of Rs. 84, as a Nata-Dastur, when a widow is to be married.

The following story will explain the origin of the Natrayat-Rajputs:—

Kanar Deo, Chohan, the Raja of Jalore, had a daughter, who was married to the Rawal of Joysalmere. But she, unfortunately, became a widow, while very young, and when she used to come in contact with other girls going to their husbands' house, in richly dresses, she often desired to be of a piece with them. This fact grieved her mother, the more; and at last, she one day, referred the matter to the Raja, who, in consultation with his son Biram Deo, proposed her second marriage, and applied to the Rana of Chitor for the purpose, without informing him of her widow-hood. The Rana accepted the offer, and when the marriage party arrived at Jalor, the "toran" was not seen on the gate, as was previously done. The Rana enquired the reason, and was replied that the "toran" in question will be found at "chouri" according to their custom. When the Rana arrived in the fort, Biram drew out his sword, and compelled the Rana, on pain of death, to marry his widowed sister. The Rana at first, objected, for fear of being remonstrated by his country men, but being assured of an offer of the Godwar District, with a fort, he consented and married the girl, by way of Nata. The Rana did not come out of the palace, for 3 days, whereupon his companions grew uneasy, and asked Kanar Deo either to bring out the Rana or to prepare himself for fighting. The Rana, however, summoned his people near the palace and showed them his face through a window. From that time, it has become a custom in the family of Ranas, to show face at the time of marriage, and it is called "Biah-ki-Jhanki." In short, this marriage was considered a Nata, and those Rajputs, who owing to their poverty or old age could not marry in their caste, used to have recourse to it. By this way, they got themselves married, but their relations and other caste-fellows ceased from eating or drinking together, and having intermarriages with them. Thus a separate class of Rajputs called Natrayats was formed, and they began to intermarry between themselves. Other Rajputs also, who thus contracted Nata, and became out-caste, joined them.

The custom observed at the Nata, is, that the widowed lady who desires to be thus remarried goes to her father's house, and the person seeking for her hand marries her, on payment of a Nata-fee, which varies according to the social status of the Nata-maker, but does not exceed Rs. 140 in any case. Her late husband's parents have nothing to interfere in the matter. But the clothes, ornaments and children, if any from the former husband, are restored to them. The new husband gives new clothes, ornaments, and chura to his bride, and takes her home, generally on the night of Saturday or Monday, and in some cases on Tuesday and Sunday. In Jalor, she is taken to her new husband's house, in day time too. No Nata can be contracted in a Khamp to which the parents of the widowed lady or of her late husband belong.

Enquiries also show that Rajputs of good caste, if they marry a Natrayat girl are sure to lose their caste by so doing, and the offspring of the marriage would also be regarded as out-caste. But at the same time, there exists a contrary saying to the following effect:—"Natrayat ki tiji pirhi gurh charhe hai" i. e. a Natrayat girl after three generations ascends the fort, or in other words can be married to a fort-holding Jagirdar or Raja. No instances, however, are forth-coming to establish the fact, and the origin of the proverb seems to be quite a mystery.

RATHOR.

The Rathors are the most illustrious of all the tribes of Súrajānsi Rajputs, and are, by far, the most numerous of all Rajput clans in Marwar. Their total number is 86,840, bearing a percentage of 35.50 and forming very nearly a third part of the aggregate number of Rajputs, as returned in the present census. The proportion of males to females, as a whole, among the Rathors of Marwar comes up to 65.2 to 34.8 per hundred. Their distribution in each parganah will be found in the Supplementary statement appended to the 1st volume of the Marwar Census Report.

Kanauj had been the original home of the Rathors from which they migrated to Marwar in about 1211 A. D., under Rao Siaji, the founder of the Jodhpore Ruling family. The present chief, H. H. Rāj Rajeshwar Maharaja Dhiraj Maharaja Sri Jaswant Singhji Bahadur G. C. S. I. is the twenty-seventh in descent and thirty-seventh in succession on the cushion of Marwar, from Rao Siaji. The following chiefs are also of the same clan or biradri as the Jodhpore house :—

Bikanere.	Ra lam.	Jhabua.	Sitamow.
Kishengurh.	Idar.	Amjehra.	Silana.

There are more than 100 offshoots or Khamps that have sprung up from this dynasty. The figures of the present census for each Khamp as well as their distribution in each parganah, are given in the extra statement of the 1st volume. In each Khamp, there are several Jagirdars and also Ehomiās and Zemindars. The Jagirdars number about 894, of which 122 are Tazimi Sardars. They are divided into 34 branches of which following are the chief :—

Jodha.	Rupawat.	Mertia.
Bhict.	Champawat.	Karamsot.
Kurnot.	Kumpawat.	Udawat.
Patawat.	Jaitawat

The estates held by Rathor Sardars have sprung up during the existence of the present state and were given as maintenance or in lieu of services rendered, to the younger branches of the chief's family.

The Kuldevi or family deity of the Rathors is Nag-Naichān. Its original name was Rajeshwari or Ratheshwari. It took its present name after the village Nagana in Pachbhadra, where a temple for it was built by Rao Dūharji. There is also a temple in the Jodhpore fort near Zanana Deodi, and almost every Rathor village has a "than" dedicated to the deity. It is usually under the shade of a "nimb" tree, for which reason the tree is regarded as sacred by the Rathor.

Many Rathors are also followers of Shiv and Vishnu, and they worship Hanumanji, Gogaji, Ram Deoji. The Mertia Rathors pay great respect to Chatar-Bhujji whose temple there is in Merta. They generally wear a piratra over their turban in honor of the deity. It is a small piece of silken cloth with coloured tassels, tied over the turban by way of sirpech. The Rathors of Jodha, Udawa, Champawat, and Kumpawat clan are followers of Vishnu, and trust in Ghalzya-Gushains. They regard Nathchaks as place of worship.

The ancient history of the Rathors is best told in their annals. "The Mogul Emperors," says Col. Tod, "were indebted for half their conquests to the Lakh Turwar Rathoran, the 100,000 swords of the Rathors."

Lord Frederick Rober'ts, the other day, on his inspection of the newly organised Jodhpore cavalry, thus testified to the many excellent qualities of the Rathors :—

"In the life of Col. Skinner we are told that if we seek for a picture of chivalrous gallantry, unswerving fidelity and fearless self-devotion, we have to turn to the cavalry of the Rajput States, and particularly to that of the Rathors. Who shall then find acts of resolute heroism that have not been surpassed by the troops of any age or country."

The following words from the speech of His Excellency, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava speak volumes of the characteristics of this martial race of Maru—the home of the most ancient and famous chivalry in this ancient and famous land of Rajasthan. :—

"It is well known in the annals of India that the chiefs of Marwar have ever been distinguished for their valour and for the chivalry with which they have ever been inspired, as well as by the loyal feelings and devoted manner in which they have in the past, rendered their services through their legitimate sovereigns."

"Enough of the noble Rathors," the most distinguished clan of the great Rajput race.

BHATHI.

The Bhatīs are next to Rathors, the most numerous of all the Rajput tribes in Marwar. Their total number, according to the present census, comes up to 27,154, which bears a percentage of 11.10, and forms nearly the eighth part of the total Rajput population.

The Bhatīs belong to the Yadu family of Chundarbansi Rajputs, and trace their lineal descent to Krishna. Colonel Tod calls them the most illustrious of all the tribes of Ind.

After the two families of Pandus and Kauravās were brought to end in the Great War of the Bharta, the survivors of the descendants of Krishna retired to Central Asia where they founded Gazni and other countries. Being driven back, they migrated to Panjab where they held supremacy for a long period. Some say the Bhatīs derive their name from their long residence at Bhatnere in the Panjab. But according to Colonel Walter, as well as Dr. Hunter, they take their name from an ancestor named Bhati who was renowned as a warrior when the tribes were settled in the Panjab. From Bhatnere they came to Derawal and thence to Jeysalmere, their present capital.

The Bhati Rajput, as described by Colonel Tod, is not so athletic as the Rathor, or so tall as the Kuchhwaha, but generally fairer than either. He would not eat boar. As regards the marriage ceremonies, among the Bhatīs, it is optional for the father of a girl to reject the betrothal when once contracted, though it is hardly the case with other Rajput tribes.

Jesa and Raolots are the chief branches of the Bhatīs that are found in Marwar. Here they also hold several jagir and possess lands chiefly on account of the matrimonial alliances they have always been foremost to make with the Rajas and chiefs. It is only on account of such connections that the Raolot Bhatīs are usually styled by their relations, though in jokes as Bai-Mungas.

CHOHAN.

The Chohans are described by Colonel Tod to be the most valiant of the whole Rajput race, and had been once very powerful. They were the last Hindu rulers of Delhi, after the Tunwars, and as appears from the old coins, Tamba-Patars, and other inscriptions, they also had supremacy in several places in Marwar, where they number about 25,782, and still hold extensive land, by way of Bhomichara, as well as in lieu of services done to the state. The ratio they bear to the total number of Rajputs is 10.54 per cent.

The Chohans are one of the four Agnikula races, being produced from Agnikund at Abu, as mentioned above. Several minor castes of Hindus, also deduce their origin to them.

The most important Khamps that sprung from the Chohans, are the Deora, Hada, Sonigra, Nadol, Nirban, Purbia and Sanchora.

A considerable number of the Chohans was forced to Islamism, by Ferozshah Tuglak in about 1383 A. D. The chief of them are the Kaim-Khanis who number about 4,133 in Marwar.

Shakambhari-Mata is the chief goddess worshipped by the Chohans.

Goga had also been a man of celebrity among the Chohans. A thread of his name is usually tied, as a ready cure, to one whom a snake bites. The day held sacred for him, is the Bhadon Sud 9th, and is termed Goga-num. His Mahomedan followers call him Goga-Peer.

The mode of succession among the Chohans of Sanchor, and other western districts, is generally by equal division of property, among the sons of the deceased, as well as, by consideration of the number of wives.

The Natrayat-Rajputs owe their origin to the Chohans, who introduced the system of Nata. Kanar Deo, the Raja of Jalor was the first Chohan who married his widowed daughter to the Rana of Clitor, by way of Nata.

KUCHHWAHA.

The Kuchhwaha Rajputs were returned in Marwar as 12,928. They stand fourth in serial order, bearing a percentage of 5.69 and forming a seven-teenth part of the whole Rajput population in Marwar. The proportion of females to males among the Kuchhwahas is however high, being 60.59 to 39.40 per hundred. The reason of the excess might be explained by the fact that the Kuchhwahas are chiefly the Ganayats, and their daughters are consequently given in marriage, on a large scale, to the Rathors and other Rajputs of Marwar.

The Kuchhwahas trace their lineage to "Kush," the second son of "Rama." They migrated from Ajudhia to Narvar, thence to Rothas and lastly to Amer,—where many branches sprung up from them; the chief being of Shekhawats, Niroomas and Rajawats.

The Kuchhwahas are mostly the followers of Vishnu, a very few of them being also Shivites and Shaktik. Their family deity is Jamvai Mata. There are no Natrayats among the Kuchhwahas, and as a rule their women wear no ornaments of silver on their hands and ears, but golden ones.

The Shekhawats are the descendants of Shekhaji, who was, styled so after the tribe of an Islamite saint, named Shekh Burhan, to whose prayers, he owed his existence. The saint had directed Mokal (the father of Shekha) who prayed to be no longer childless, to have a cow sacrificed at the birth of his son, and have him sprinkled with the blood, by which means, he was destined to be the patriarch of a numerous race. But Mokal, being a Hindu, the advice was not, however, literally followed, and Shekha was sprinkled, with the blood of a goat instead that of a cow. As a mark of reverence to the saints' injunctions, the Shekhawats make their children wear "Muldeā" and put on a blue tunic and cap, till six years of age. As Colonel Tod says they also abstain from boar's flesh and eat no Jhatka meat "in which blood remains."

The Niroomas form the ruling family of Ulwar, and the Rajawats claim to be the nearest relations and heirs to the Jeypore Chiefs.

SISODIA.

The Sisodias are a famous branch of Gelot Rajputs, to which the ancient house of Udeypore belongs. Their total numerical strength in Marwar, according to the present census, comes up to 13,619; the number of females being nearly double to that of males. The same remarks for the excess in the number of females might be applied here as in the case of Kuchhwahas. The Sisodias bear a percentage of 5.56 to the total number of Rajputs.

The Sisodias show great respect to Eklunga Mahadeo from very early ages, and to whom, as they believe, their ancestor Bapa Rawal was indebted for his conquest of Chitor. They were called Gelots till the time of Bapa, but after the latter's residence in village Sisod, his descendants assumed the name of Sisodias. It is said that they formerly abstained altogether from the use of liquor, but now their oath seems to be null and void. They are mostly found in the Godwar District, where they hold Jagirs.

Ahara, Chunhrawat, Suktawat and Ranawat are the chief Khamps of Sisodias. The Ranawats form the chief Patvi branch among them, as are the Jodhas among the Rathors, and the Rajawats among the Kuchhwahas.

PUNWAR.

The Punwars are one of the four Agnicula races whose origin has already been noticed in the beginning of this chapter. Their total number in Marwar according to the present census is 11,118 which bears a percentage of 4.54 to the total Rajput population of the country. The Punwars had once been the most powerful race to which belonged Bikram and Bhoj, the greatest Rajas of ancient India, whose names are household words even up to the present day. They attained an early consolidation of their dominion and enjoyed extensive sovereignties as an ancient saying denotes:—

Pirthi bura Punwar—Pirthi Punwaran tani.

Ek Ujeni Dhar—Duje Abu bakhno.

i. e.—The Punwars are the greatest on the face of earth, and the world is of the Punwars. The seat of their power is in the first place Ujjen and Dhar, and secondly the mount of Abu

In Marwar the Punwars came from Abu. Dharni Barah had been the most celebrated Punwar Raja of Balmere; and his nine divisions of Marwar are still known as Nau Kot Murusathali. They are thus explained:—

Mundowar Savant huo—Ajmere Singhsu.

Gudh-Pugal Guj-Mul—Huo Ludkarwa Bhanbia.

All-Pal Arbiid—Bhoj-Raj Jalandhar.

Jog-Raj Dhar Dhat—Huo Hansu Parukkar.

Nau Kot Kiraru Sanjugat—Thar Punwaran thapia.

Dharni Barah Dhar Bhanian—Kot bant jue jue kha.

i. e.—Dharni Barah divided the whole land of Punwars into nine Kots and gave one to each of his brothers having kept Kot-Kiraru for himself. Mundore was given to Sayant, Ajmere to Sindhu, Pungal-Gudh was made over to Guj-Mul and Lu-lharwa to Bhan. Abu came to the lot of All-Pal and Bhoj-Raj obtained Jalandhar or Jalor. Jog-Raj got Dhat or Umarkot, and Parkar came in the possession of Hans-Raj.

But such partition of the kingdom, however, soon weakened the power of the Punwars as a whole, and being overwhelmed by Bhatias, Chohans, Rathors and Parihars, they were gradually wrested of their possessions, and driven away from the country. A few branches of the Punwars—viz. Sodha, Sankhla and Bhayal are still found in Marwar. They hold land merely by way of Bhomichara and subsist on cultivation. There is no great Jagirdar among them.

Widow-marriage is also allowed amongst the Punwars, and in some places in the eastern part of Marwar they as a custom burn the dead bodies in a reverse position.

SOLUNKHI.

The Solunkhis are returned to be only 7,023 in Marwar and stand seventh in numerical order among all the Rajput tribes, bearing a percentage of 2.86 only. They are of the Agnicula race, and their another name is Chaluk. According to Colonel Tod, the Solunkhis were once important as princes of Sorun on the Ganges ere the Rathors obtained Kanauj.

They ruled for many years at Tonk, Gujrat, Toda and the Dekhan. Being driven from Gujrat under their leader, Raja Karan by Alaaddin Khilji, they occupied the Ranak hills between the territories of Sirohi and Marwar, whence they scattered over in Marwar, and are found as Bhomias in the parganas of Jaswantpura and Bali.

They are the worshippers of Vishnu. The use of drink is not very common among them. In Sauchar there are found some Solunkhis, to which the ruling family of Rewah belongs.

PARIHAR.

The Parihars are said to be the Agni-Bansi Rajputs, being produced from Agni-kund like Chohans, Punwars, and Solunkhis.

They were once a very powerful tribe and ruled at Kabul from which they migrated to Ajudhia and thence to Marwar. Here they occupied Mundore and held it for a long period. But they are now found in very small numbers, being only 6,405 as returned in the present census. Their proportion to the total number of Rajputs is nearly 2.61 per cent.

The Parihars are the worshippers of Vishnu. Their family deity is the Chawanda Mata, which has its temple in the Jodhpore fort. They also show respect to Bur, Pēepal, Nimb and Rohira trees, and regard it inauspicious to cut them. Nahar Rao had been a celebrated man among the Parihars, whose Gupha (cave) there is at Mundore where the people frequently go to worship him. The marriage ceremonies and funeral rites of the Parihars are much like those of the Rathors, and Bhatīs of Marwar.

Enda is the most important branch of the Parihars and occupies the sandy tract known by the name of Endawati which lies in the west of Jodhpore. The Rathors owe their possession of Mundore to the Endas. Mundore was wrested from Rana Rupra, the Parihar sovereign by Jalal-ud-din Khilji in 1293 A. D., but it was taken back by Rana Ugamsi, (the Enda Sirdar) in 1395, and made over to Rao Chundaji in marriage, as the proverb says:—

Chunda Chouri char divi, Mundore daija.

Enda tañu ubkar Kamdhuj kadhi na bisre.

i. e.—The Endas gave the fort of Mundore to Chundaji in dowry of their daughter, the Rathors ought not to forget this act of their kindness.

It is said, that in very ancient time, some Enda Rajputs, who became out-caste, joined the low caste people, as for instance the Lukhuia Dheds (a low caste) trace their origin to Lukhaji, who was a Rajput of Enda clan. The Endas do not eat boar.

Some very strange superstitious beliefs prevail among them, concerning their own clan. They believe every individual of their Khamp to be incapable of being injured from lightning, and attribute this blessing to the prediction of one of their ancestors named Khalhoji, about whom good many strange stories are current. Another faith of the Endas is that no epidemic is ever to break-out within the limits of their home (Endawati) it being under the special protection of their family deity, the Chawanda Mata, and it is only on account of this conviction that the pilgrims at Ramdev's fair have usually to go to Endawati whenever an apprehension of the out-break of any such disease is entertained.

TUNWAR.

The Tunwar Rajputs claim their descent from Raja Judhishtira of the Pandu family. Their number in Marwar, as compared with other Rajput tribes, is very small, being 2,006 only and bears a proportion of 82 to the total number of Rajputs. They are said to have held the supremacy at Delhi for a very long period which fact has given rise to the proverb—“Jab tab Dilli Tunwron ke” i. e. the Tunwars do always possess Delhi.

There is another tradition which refers to the erection of a pillar at Delhi by Anangpal, the founder of the Tunwar Dynasty. "A holy Brahmin assured the Raja"—says Dr. Hunter—"that the pillar had been driven so deeply into the earth that it reached the head of Vasuki, the serpent king who supports the world, and consequently had become immovable, whereby the dominion was ensured for ever to the dynasty of its founder, so long as the pillar stood. The incredulous Raja ordered the monument to be dug up, when its base was found redenned with the blood of the serpent king. Thus convinced, Anangpal at once commanded that the shaft should be sunk again in the earth, but as a punishment for his want of faith, it appeared that no force could restore it in its place as before." Thus the pillar remained loose and hence the saying—Kili to dhili bhai, Tunwar hoai nut heen.

The sovereignty of Delhi was afterwards wrested by the Chohans, and the Tunwars consequently migrated to Jelupatan, now known by the name of Torawati in the Jeypore state, whence they came to Marwar. Here Ramdeo Tunwar was believed to be a man of miraculous power, and his Samadh is situated near Pokaran where a large fair is held every year. It is mostly attended to by the low-caste people, as says the proverb:—Ram-deoji ko mile so dhed hi dhed mile.

The manners and customs of the Tunwar Rajputs are much like those of Bhatias. Their chief clans are Jator and Kelor, a large number of which was forced to Mohamedanism by Shahab-ud-din Ghorî in about 1193 A. D.

There is not any big Jagirdar among the Tunwars in Marwar, and their chief occupation is cultivation as well as personal service.

JHALA.

The Jhalas are a branch of Makwana Rajputs to which the ruling family of Jhalawar belongs. They are found in very small number in Marwar, being returned as 206 only. They are said to have originally come from Kuchh and afterwards settled in Gujrat under Harpal, where his descendants came to be styled as Jhala. From Gujrat they proceeded to Marwar, Meywar and Haroti.

The State of Jhalawar in Rajputana owes its origin to Zalim Singh Jhala, a Minister of Kotah. It was dismembered from the State of Kotah in 1834 and created into a new principality as a separate provision for the descendants of Zalim Singh in recognition of the valuable services rendered by the latter to the British Government in the suppression of Pindaris in 1817.

The Jhalas generally live on cultivation in Marwar.

GUJAR.

The Gujars form the third caste of the group, Military and Dominant; the Jats and the Rajputs exceeding them in point of number. Their total number according to the present census comes up to 25,444 (males 13,125, females 12,319) which bears a proportion of 4.18 per cent. to the total strength of the group.

The Gujars are not regarded in Marwar as a dominant caste, being chiefly the cattle-breeders and dealers, though they were once very powerful in Gujrat, and the present chief of Samthar in Bundelkhand is also a Gujar by caste. The Gujars, termed in Sanskrit as Grujars are identified with Gurjis, a tribe of Gurjistan or Georgia, in Central Asia. They first came in the Panjab where, as says General Cunningham, they gave their name to several important places such as Gujranwala, Gujrat and Gujar-Khan. Afterwards they migrated to Delhi and Ajmere, and thence to Surashterdees where they overpowered the Balbhipore Raj and occupied the whole territory called after them as Gujrat and Gujar-Khand.

The Bhats trace the origin of the Gujars to Rajputs on the supposition that many "Rajput Gots" such as Tunwars, Chohan, Chandel are in vogue among them, but on the contrary, several "Gots" of Gujars are also found among other castes, as for instance there are Gujar-Gor among the Brahmans, Bar-Gujar among the Rajputs and Gujar-Pathan among the Afghans.

In Marwar, the Gujars came from Ajmere and are largely found in Parbatsar and other eastern parganas. They are mostly cattle breeders and for this reason, have their abodes generally outside a city or at an un-occupied part of a town, which fact has given rise to a proverb "Gujar jahan Ujar."

The Gujars form a chief class of Dhabais in Eastern Rajputana, their women being chiefly preferred for this purpose by the Rajputs of that part. They take a special pride in following that profession and are much delighted to be styled by the name of Patail. In some part of Rajputana as well as in the Delhi district, they are also notorious for committing offences of thefts, highway robbery &c. though in other places they, on the contrary, serve as Sepahis and Chowkidars. The Gujars are said to be unfaithful and at the same time malicious. They have no firm resolution and are always fickle-minded as the proverb runs:—Gujar, Nazar. Mer, Kutta—Soi piche sat mutta e. i.—Gujars, Nazar, Mers and dogs always change their opinions. They have in mind to do one thing before they go to bed, but change it seven times after they get up.

The Gujars are the worshippers of Deri Mata, Deoji, and Bheronji and total Phuls in their honor. They eat meat and are also accustomed to Delhi for tab Dilli

Deoji had been a chief object of worship among the Gujars. He flourished some 650 years ago and performed several miracles at Meywar. His shrine was built at Chitor by Sanga Rana, who also used to wear a golden Phul in his honor. The Pujaris of Deojis shrine are generally Gujars, and they do not marry at all.

A Gujar widow can contract Nata with her late husband's brother, which is rarely the case with other Hindus.

A son-in-law can be adopted among the Gujars without any change of his "Got", if there be no issue.

A dead body is first shaved among the Gujars before it is carried to be burnt, and Saradh is performed on the day of Diwali festival.

J A T.

The Jat is the most numerous caste in Marwar, even surpassing the Rajputs in point of number. The figures for the Jats, as recorded in the present census, come up to 3,15,562 (males 1,71,881, and females 1,43,562) which bear a proportion of 51·8 per hundred to the total number of the group they belong to. They constitute a greater portion of the husbandmen in Marwar, being nearly one-fourth of the total agricultural population of the country. They are numerous in the Districts of Jodhpore, Nagor, Merta and Parbatsar. They are called Jats, because they were produced as they suppose, from the hair-(Jat) of Siva. Numerically they head the list of caste, though politically they are not of much importance in Marwar. Their origin, as well as their position is fully described by D. C. Ibbetson Esqr. in the last census report of the Punjab, where they are the most interesting people in every respect. According to him, the Jats are not distinct from the Rajputs, both belonging to a common stock. He regards the distinction between Jat and Rajput as social rather than ethnic. "Colonel Tod," says he, "classes the Jats as one of the great Rajput tribes; and extends his identification with the Getae to both races, but here General Cunningham differs holding the Rajputs to belong to the original Aryan stock, and the Jats to belong to a latter wave of immigrants from the north-west probably of Scythian race."

There are three divisions of Jats in Marwar. The first consists of the original or Asli jats, who have preserved their purity of blood. They are divided into two sections Godara and Punia—so called after the names of their founders. They do not intermarry among themselves.

In the second division are included those who belong to the Joint Jat-Rajput stock, as many Rajputs, for fear of Musalman invaders betook themselves to the occupation of Jats and thus became affiliated to them.

The third division comprises the families of Jats of inferior social rank, termed Anjna-jats. They are called after the names of the villages they dwell in, such as Mundel of V. Mundwa, Endania of V. Endana, Dhadel of V. Dhedia &c.

The Jat of Marwar although not following the military profession, is in appearance tall, brave, and physically strong. He is laborious and hard-working, preserving at the same time, the instinct of original independance. He is an object of fear when seen alone in a jungle as the people generally say :—

Jungal jat na chherye, katan bich kirar.

Runghur kabhi na chherye jab tab kare binas.

i. e. Do not provoke a Jat in a jungle or a Bania in his shop. and never a Rajput, who is sure to bring ruin some-time or other.

The Jat is regarded as the best cultivator of the country, and is famous for great diligence in improving his land. According to the saying—jat jahan thut—a village inhabited by Jats is always expected to be in a flourishing state. He is usually styled Chaudhri or Patail. The Jat is also a good jester and a very outspoken man. A Juggler or an acrobat does not like to show his performances in the presence of a Jat, as the latter is always bold enough to betray the dextrities of his art. Nat bud awe, jat buil nahin awe—is a common saying in Marwar, which shows that a Jat is more cunning and artful than a Nat.

The Jats are usually fond of jagree, the use of which is very common among them and which confirms a betrothal previously contracted.

Widow marriage is also in vogue among the Jats, and is performed in a very simple manner. If a widow desires to contract Nata, the custom observed is, that the new bride-groom stands in front of his house with a load of grass on his head, which the widow takes down and carries it in, followed by the bride-groom. If the Nata is contracted on behalf of the male, the latter usually taking off a pot, full of water, from the widow's head enters the house followed by the widow.

If both the parties belong to separate villages, the widow is usually carried to her new husband's home during the night time, the general belief of the people being that whoever happens to see the face of the widow before she reaches her new home, is sure to meet his death within six months from the date.

There is a Punth among the Jats, the followers of which are called Jasnathi Jats. They are Sidhs. Jasnath, the founder belonged to village Katrasar in Bikanere. He introduced the Punth in about 1488 A. D. The Jasnathi Jats are mostly found in Bikanere, and in Marwar, they are chiefly confined to village Panchla in Nagor. The chief distinction of the Punth is, that the followers usually tie a black cord round their neck and bury the dead-bodies especially in some cattle-folds near their houses, instead of burning them like the ordinary Jats. If a Jasnathi Jat has an ordinary Jat-woman for his wife, she will have to observe all the ceremonies of the Punth. Similarly a Jasnathi woman if married to an ordinary Jat will be treated as an ordinary Jat woman.

Teja had been the chief object venerated by the Jats of Marwar, Ajmere and Kishengurh. He belonged to village Kharral in Nagor. Once it happened that some Mers carried away the cattle belonging to the Gujars of village Paner in Kishengurh, where his father-in-law used to live. They applied to Teja for help, who pursued the Mers, and had the cattle restored to the Gujars. But he fell wounded in the strife, and was bitten by a snake in the tongue which caused his death. His wife burnt herself alive on the spot with his remains. From that time a large fair used to be held at Kishengurh in honor of Tejaji. It is now held at Parbatsar in Marwar and is called Teja-ji-ka-Mela.

The following account of the fair from the Gazeteer of Marwar by Col. C. K. M. Walter, will be in place here.

"The Parbatsar fair is held in the month of Bhāḍōn (August), and lasts for ten days. Bullocks are sold in large numbers. It is attended by about 10,000 people and is held in honor of Tejaji. The way the fair came to be held at Parbatsar in Tejaji's honor is, that in the time of Maharaja Bijē Singh there was a very sharp Hakim at Parbatsar, who found that Marwaris, especially Jats went in great numbers to the Sarsara of Kishengurh, and that a good income was derived by the Kishengurh Darbar in consequence, so knowing that the chief object which took the Jats to Sarsara was to worship at Tejaji's shrine, he made up a story that Tejaji had appeared to him in a dream, and desired that he should be worshipped in future only at Parbatsar, so the Hakim had a figure made representing Tejaji, and ordered all Jats, on pain of punishment, to come to the Parbatsar fair and not to go to Kishengurh. The Darbar derives a revenue of from Rs. 5,000 to 6,000 a year, from this fair, which is attended chiefly by Jats."

Rev. M. A. Sherring M. A., in his Hindu Tribes and Castes thus speaks on the subject.

"The Jats have the idea that if a man bitten by a snake tie a cord round his right foot, and repeat the words Tejaji, he will recover. Most Jats wear round their necks an amulet of silver representing Tejaji on horse back, his sword drawn, and a snake in the act of biting his tongue."

DESI-MUSALMAN.

A few words have already been spoken about the Desi Musalmans or as they are termed Musalman-Rajputs. They consist of the following Rajput Tribes—(1) Gor, (2) Tunwar, (3) Chohan, (4) Gehlot, (5) Parihar, (6) Bhati, (7) Daima, (8) Sisodia.

Of these, the Chohāns, and the Bhatīs named after their conversion as Kaim-Khanīs and Sindhi-Sepahīs respectively form a large part, and will consequently be dealt with separately.

A few years back they mostly followed Hindu ceremonies. They used "Torans" on marriage occasions and worshiped Mataji also, but now they are accepting Mohamedan precepts.

They do not give their daughters in marriage to Sheikhs, Pathans or Syads though they eat together with them. Like the Hindus they exclude four "Gots" while contracting marriages among them. They have got their own Bhatīs, and Mirāsīs. The system of Nata is also in vogue among them.

K A I M - K H A N I S .

The total number of Kaim-Khanīs in Marwar is 4,133: They were originally Chohan Rajputs and their conversion dates from the time of Ferozshah as previously stated. They came to Marwar originally from Shekhawati and are mostly found in the eastern parganas of Didwana, Merta and Nagor. Their ancestor Karamsi Chohan, son of Moti Rai, the chief of Dadra in Hissar, was converted to Mohamedanism by Syad Nasir, an officer of Ferozshah Tuglak, in about 1383 A. D. He was kept at Hissar by Nasir Ali, as his son under the name of Kaim Khan. Subsequently his other two brothers were made Musalman and were named Zen-Uddin and Zabruddin. Thus the descendants of the three brothers were known by the name of Kaim-Khani, Zendan and Zabran respectively, but now the three together are known as Kaim-Khanīs only. After the death of Syad Nasir, Kaim Khan rose in power and got Hissar in Jagir, till at last Khizar Khan, the Emperor of Delhi, being suspicious of his character, caused him to be thrown into the river Jumna, from the fort. His sons, Taj Khan and Mohammad Khan were expelled from Hissar. They lived for some time at Jeysalmere and Nagor and subsequently founded two separate principalities of Fatehpore and Jhunjnu which their descendants held under the title of Nawab till 1731 A. D. The last Nawabs were Kamyab Khan and Ruh-ulla-khan who being overpowered by the Shekhawat Kuchhwayas, returned to Marwar. The descendants of Kamyab Khan of Fatehpore are still found at Kuchawan in Marwar.

The Kaim Khanīs are mostly found residing in Shekhawati. They are also living though in small number at Hissar and Narnaul where Ikhtiar Khan, the eldest son of Kaim Khan had been once in full authority. A large number of them is also employed in Hyderabad (Deccan) under military service.

The Kaim-Khanis, are Musalman only nominally. They are ignorant of Quran, Hadis and other Mohamedan precepts, and on the other hand, they correspond to Rajputs in many instances. Unlike the Mohamedans, they use torun on marriage occasions and observe the ceremony of pheras after nikah. Like the Hindus they wear golden phuls round their neck and silver rings in their ear. They also distribute Thag to Mirasis, as the Rajputs do to the Charans.

They abstain from eating together with Parde-i Musalmans. In some places at Shekhawati they eat, drink and even smoke together with the Rajputs. In their dress they are very like Hindus. The same is the case with their women, who like Hindu females observe Silestam and other Holi and Dewali festivals. A Kaim-Khani usually avoids marriage with his uncle's daughter. He can give his daughter in marriage to a Pathan or Syad without taking any from him in return. The Pathans of Kanoli are the chief to form marriage connections with the Kaim-Khanis of Marwar.

The chief occupation of Kaim-Khanis are military service, trade and mazduri. In Shekhawati there are some Kaim-Khani Jagirdars. A few are also employed in Marwar and Hyderabad as Jamadars and Resaldars. Formerly they were not the less notorious than the Shekhawats and Ladhkanis for dacoiting and robbing, so that even up to present, they are under the supervision of Thagi and Dacoity Department.

The Kaim-Khanis of Marwar are tall in stature and strong in constitution. They are hard-working and laborious and at the same time simple and ignorant.

SINDHI.

The Sindhis form a large part of Musalman Rajputs in Marwar. They are mostly found in Sheo, Mallani and Sanchor, where they are chiefly cultivators and herdsman. They originally belong to the Yádu family of Chanderbansi Rajputs, but now consist of various tribes such as Bhati, Sodha, Tunwar and Rathor. Their conversion dates to a period some 1,200 years back, when Mohammad Kasam commenced his invasions of Sindh, from Arabia.

The Sindhis are divided into various clans or "Firkas," the chief of which are Sama, Sanad, Gajju, Bhia, Panno, Sithar, Somra and Mohr.

The Sama clan is called so after the name of its founder and traces its pedigree to Bhati Rajputs. Sanad and Gajju were orinally Sodha; Bhia and Panno are said to have been descended from Tunwars, and Sithars declare themselves to be of Rathor origin.

Somra and Mohr boast themselves highly for being of purely Mohamedan blood.

Dhatis and Khudalis are the two chief subdivisions of Sindhis in Marwar as regards their original residence. The Dhatis are those who originally occupied the tract that extends from Thar Parkar to Sukhar and Rori. They have got their fixed homes to dwell in. The Khudalis are those who had for their original home that sandy part of Sindh which lies to the north of Jeysalmere and which is termed Khudal. They are largely found in Marwar. They usually dwell in temporary thatched huts numbering not more than five in any place. They don't think it necessary, as they usually say, to arrange for their permanent dwellings, simply because life is transitory, although they generally live longer than the people of other castes in Marwar. The chief means of their subsistence is their cattle, which chiefly consist of cow, goat and sheep. In hot weather they generally seek lower plains which are comparatively cooler than high "thals" to which they resort in cold season. They never use Charpoys or cots. The thick woollen blankets or "Ralis" and in rainy season, some dried grass, form their chief beddings.

The Sindhis are generally of strong constitution, tall and hard-working. They have generally very long hairs, their females are of fairer complexion. They put on very few clothes, and use blankets only.

The Sindhis belong to the Sunni Sect of Musalmans, but they never go to prayers or read Kuran like bigotted Mohamedans. A few who do so are called Fakirs, and seem to be very simple pious and obliging. They show great respect to their Pir, who generally comes to pay a visit to them from the northern part of Sindh.

MINOR AGRICULTURAL.

The total population of the castes included under the group Minor Agricultural aggregates to 274,369 of which 143,332 are males and 130,037 females. The figures of proportion per hundred to the total agricultural class as well as to the total population of Marwar come up to 28.05 and 10.89 respectively. The main castes comprising the group are:—Mali, Pital or Kalbi, Bishnoi, Sirvi and Sindhi, the last being already described. Pital is synonymous with Kalbi, as will appear from the description of the tribe given below:

MALIS.

The Malis, though included among the agricultural castes, also follow other occupations. They form a very industrious class of market-gardeners.

Their total number in Marwar as returned in the present census is 60,219 (males 32,214 females 28,015). They comprise nearly one-fourth part of the total population of the group they belong to.

Formerly they were divided into two separate groups as far as occupation was concerned. Those who belonged to rural population and solely followed cultivation were designated as Ban-Malis, while those cultivating flowers only were termed as Phul-Malis. But this distinction is only nominal now, and both are found promiscuously co-mingled. As regards their origin, there are generally two divisions of Malis, but both now intermarry. The first comprises those who boast of unmixed origin and are called Mor-Malis the word Mor signifying priority. The second division includes those who trace their origin to Rajputs. Some Rajputs, so the local tradition says were put into confinement by Shahabuddin Ghorî and were set to liberty through the medium of the Emperor's gardener named Baba on their promise of adopting his profession. Thus they became Malis and there are found sub-clans among them just like those of Rajputs viz:—Chohan, Solunkhi, Bhati, Tunwar &c. Some Malis are also known after the name of their original abodes, as for instance—Ajmera of Ajmere, Sanchora of Sanchor, Mundoria of Mundor and so on.

The custom of Nata i. e. Karewa is prevalent among the Malis, Saturday night being generally fixed for the ceremony. The lowest amount of Nata fee fixed is Rs. 16 only, but in some Khamps it also amounts to Rs. 55. The widow desiring to be thus remarried goes to her parents to whom the Nata fee is paid by the new husband; the ornaments as well as the offsprings if any by the former husband being made over to the latter's parents. Among the Malis, a man cannot marry his brother's widow, but any other man in the Got may do so.

The Malis are the followers of Vishnu, as well as Shakti, and Siva. The chief deities worshipped are Sanwalaji and Ramdeoji.

The Malis have got their different names in the several parts of the Punjab, and they are thus described by D. C. J. Ibberson Esqr.

"The Mali is the Mālakāra or florist of the Purans, is generally a market or nursery gardener, and is most numerous in the vicinity of towns where manure is plentiful and there is a demand for his produce. He is perhaps the most skilful and industrious cultivator we possess, and does wonders with his land, producing three- or even four crops within the year from the same plot. He is found under the name of Mali only in the Jamna Zone, including the eastern portions of Hissar, his place being taken by the Saini in the eastern sub-mountain districts and by the Arrin or Baghban in the remainder of the province. He is almost always a Hindu. Most of the few Malis shown for the western districts were returned as Maliar, the Punjabi form of Mali, and some of them as Phulara or Phulwara.

PITAL OR KALBI.

The Pitals are really the same as the Kalbis, though they have returned themselves separately in Marwar, their respective numbers being 35,156 and 27,265 or 62,421 in all. They follow no other profession but cultivation, and are called Chowdhris. They assumed the name of Pital after their migration to Pátan, and in the eastern part of Marwar, they chiefly go under the same name. In Malwa and the Deccan they are, however, known as Kalbis. The origin of the name Kalbi might be traced to the Parsian word Kalba which means a plough, but the local tradition assigns a different etymology of the name being derived from Kol or Kul a family, and be two, which means one produced from two families. The Kalbis are said to have sprung from the combination of Rajputs with some of the Brahman women of Gujrat, where the former had sought refuge for fear of Musalman invasions over their country, about the twelfth century A. D. Hence the derivation of the name. The Kalbi women still abstain from the use of liquor and meat, being originally Brahman by caste and do not join their husbands in taking meals, and also keep their vessels separate, as the latter do not observe such restrictions.

The original home of Kalbis in Marwar was Bhinmal now amalgamated with Jaswantpura, whence they proceeded to Patan in Gujrat. From Patan they came to Pachbhadra and thence to Siwana.

The chief Khamps of Kalbis are Parihar, Chohan, Solunkhi, Gayal &c., each of which is again divided into various sub-clans, being chiefly called after the names of birds or animals such as Tantia, Kag, Bichhu, Baya, Buk, Kakal, Buka, &c. They are the worshippers of Vishnu. Some being also the followers of Shakti. The former do not observe any of the funeral ceremonies prevalent among the Hindus. As regards the marriage ceremonies, one peculiar to the Kalbis is that on the marriage day some Moth and Rajra is cooked in a large vessel round which the parents of the bride walk together (the father preceding the mother) and after making pūja of the food thus cooked, they both eat it together.

The Kalbi women do not wear churas of lac, but ivory ones of white colour. Silver ornaments are generally used for the nose, ears, and neck, and those of brass for feet, with the exception of a few villages in the district of Siwana where gold supplies the place of silver and the latter that of brass.

BISHNOI.

The Bishnois have been returned as 40,023 in Marwar. They were originally Jats, and owe the foundation of their sect to Jambhaji, a Punwar Rajput who was born in 1451 A. D. and led the life of an ascetic and a celibate. He is said to have performed many miracles. In 1487 when a famine broke-out in Nagor and about 800 Jats were emigrating, he arrived there and with a maund of grain he fed them for three years. This led the conversion of the Jats to Vishnuism, Jambhaji being regarded by them as an incarnation of Vishnu, and hence the origin of the name Bishnoi. Another interpretation of the word is that as the doctrines of the new creed numbered 29 or in other words bis (twenty) and nau (nine), the adherents of the sect, therefore came to be called as Bishnois.

They are numerous in Marwar only, and have the same clans or subdivisions among them as the Jats. Widows are also allowed to contract Nata. Their chief occupation is cultivation and they also keep large number of camels. In their rites and ceremonies they partake of both Hindu and Musalman religion.

The following extract from the Punjab census report of 1881 will fully explain the tenet and practice of the Bishnois:—

“They (Bishnois) abstain entirely from animal food, and have a peculiarly strong regard for animal life, refusing as a rule to accompany a sporting party, they look upon tobacco as unclean in all its form; they bury their dead at full length, usually at the threshold of the house itself or in adjoining cattle-shed; or in a sitting posture like the Hindu Sanyasis; they shave off the choti or scalp-lock; and they usually clothe themselves in wool as being at all times pure. They are more particular about ceremonial purity than even the strictest Hindu, and there is a saying that if a Bishnoi's food is on the first of a string of 20 camels and a man of another caste touch the last camel, the former will throw away his meal. In their marriage ceremonies they mingle Mohamedan with Hindu forms, verses of the Quran being read as well as passages of the Shastras, and the pheras or circumambulation of the sacred fire being apparently omitted.”

SIRVI.

The Sirvis form the chief class of minor agriculturists. Their total number in Marwar as ascertained from the present census is 55,757. There are two chief divisions of Sirvis called Kharria and Jeneva.

The Kharria Sirvis are so called from having their abode originally at Khari-Khabar on the Luni. They are now found in Malwa, Meywar and Marwar. “They are stated,” says Major General Sir John Molcolm, to be the descendants of twenty four Rajputs who alone survived their Prince, Anand Ram, Raja of Kolapoor, when the fortress of that name was taken by stratagem, about six hundred years ago. These Rajputs were so ashamed at having survived their Prince that they threw aside their swords and shields and dropped the name of the Rajput for ever, taking in its stead that of Sirvi, a derivative of the Rangree word Sir, cultivation thereby intimating they would thence-forward devote themselves to the cultivation of the soil; and to this day the Sirvis are found as the best cultivators in Central India. Their skill in ascertaining where to dig well, so as to come speedily to water, is as extraordinary as it is well attested."

The chief object of worship among the Kharria Sirvis is Aiji whose Dargah there is at Bilara, and the priest or Peer-Murshad of which is termed Diwan. Their females have so deep a regard for the deity that whenever they begin grinding their corn, they usually set apart the first handful of grain in the name of Aiji, and keep it carefully till the cart called Aiji-ki-behli, which is usually taken round to collect such stores of grain, arrives at their villages. Among animals, they show respect to the cow. They eat flesh and use drink too. Nata is permissible among them, and as a rule they bury their dead.

The Jenewas do not trace their origin to Rajputs but give a different tradition of their descent, claiming their pedigree to one Bijé Pal, a disciple of Gorun Rishi of mount Abu. Bije Pal used to take no food, but milk. Once on his return from pilgrimage he happened to stay at Pali where he married a Palliwal Brahman girl named Jesodha, contrary to the injunctions of his Guru or priest, the Rishi. Jesodha gave birth to a son who was named Jenoje, and his descendants came to be called Jenewas. Their original home was Jenapore in Sirohi whence they came to Godwar in Marwar and afterwards scattered over the country. Their widows are allowed to remarry, and when a Nata is thus contracted the ceremonies of betrothal are first to be observed just in the same way as in the case of original marriages. The use of milk is considered indispensable to complete a betrothal. They abstain from the use of meat and liquor.

Both the Kharrias and Jenewas intermarry, the only distinction being that the former bury their dead while the latter burn them. The Kharrias have no objection to the use of meat and liquor, whereas the Jenewas altogether abstain from it.

FOREST AND HILL TRIBES.

Under this group are included the Mewatis, Mers, Minas, Bhils and Grassias. Their total number according to the present census aggregates 95,547 of which 51,204 are males and 44,343 females; the proportion per hundred to the total agricultural class being 9.77 and to the total population of Marwar as 3.79. The Mewatis as well as the Mers are not very numerous nor they are of any great historical interest in Marwar as they are in Ulwar and Bharatpore, so we have very little to say about them.

M E W A T I .

The total number of Mewatis in Marwar is only 422; the males being 212 and the females 210. They are the inhabitants of Mewat, a tract of country lying in Ulwar and Bharatporc. They settled in Marwar, for the first time in the district of Jaitaran whence they spread in other parts of the country. They were originally of the Yadu Rajput clan, and were called Mewatis by the old Musalman historians after their conversion.

“The expression Mewati” says Col. Percy W. Powlett, in his Gazetteer of Ulwar, “usually refers to the ruling class, while Meo designates the lower orders. The latter term is evidently not of modern origin, though it is not met with in history, and the former is now unusual, Khanzada having taken its place.”

Sir John Malcolm describes the Mewatis as the most desperate rouses in India. “Though they are stigmatized,” says he, “as robbers and assassins, they are at the same time admitted to be faithful and courageous guards and servants to those in whose service they engage.”

Though they are usually reckoned as Mohamedans, yet they follow both Hindu and Musalman religions. They observe no Hindu festivals, but Brahmans take part in their marriage contracts, and they observe some Hindu marriage ceremonies. Their chief occupation is cultivation, but they are not first rate agriculturists.

M E R .

The Mers were returned in Marwar as 355 only—males 172 and females 183. They form the mass of the population of Merwara, and in Col. Tod's time were bold licentious marauders. In Marwar they are found only in the districts of Bali, Sojat and Jaitaran. The name is derived from Mer a hill and signifies hill men. There is a proverb, which fully explains the designation—“Mer aur Mor unche par razi hain” i. e. Mers and peafowl love the heights.

The Mers trace their lineage to Rajput chiefs who took Mina girls to wife. Col. Tod also classes them as a branch of the Miras, but in Elliotts materials for the history of India, we find that they have been suspected to be a relic of the Medes, an Indo Scythian tribe that crossed into India from central Asia. The people on the whole, are a very dirty race, and from their habit of living in high places they are very indifferent about washing. They consume a good deal of tobacco, but very little opium.

The following extract from the Gazetteer of Rajputana will show the social and religious customs of the Mers;—

"Although the Mers consider themselves Hindus and are generally classed as such, yet they are little fettered with Brahmanical rites and ceremonies. They eat three times a day, maize and barley bread being their principal food, but they will eat the flesh of sheep, goats, cows and buffaloes when it is procurable. In matters of religion they do not trouble themselves much with the orthodox divinities of Brahmanism. The chief deity worshipped is Mata. Allahji is a common deity and the deified heroes Deoji and Randeoji also find worshippers.

The peculiarity of their notions towards females is thus described by Col. Tod :—

"The Mer, following the customary law handed down from his rude ancestry and existing long before the written law of Manu, has no objection to a widow as a wife. This contract is termed Nata, and his civilized master levies a fine or fee of a rupee and a quarter for the license, termed Kagri. On such marriage the bride-groom must omit in the Mor, or nuptial coronet, the graceful palmyra leaf, and substitute a small branch of the sacred peepul-wreathed in his turban. Many of the forms are according to the common Hindu ritual. The sat-phera, or seven perambulations round the jars filled with grain, piled over each other—the gat-jora, or uniting the garments—and the hatlera, or junction of hand of bride and bride groom, are followed by the Mers. The facilities for separation are equally simple. If tempers do not assimilate or other causes prompt them to part, the husband tears a shred from his turban, which he gives to his wife, and with this simple bill of divorce, placing two jars filled with water on her head, she takes whatever path she pleases, and the first man who chooses to ease her of her load becomes her future lord. "Jehur le or nikli" took the jar and went forth, is a common saying amongst the mountaineers of Merwara."

M I N A .

The Minas are the well known predatory class and their total number in Marwar amounts to 23,768. They come next to Bhils in numerical order and are mostly found in the districts of Jalor and Godwar.

The Meos and Minas are said to be connected with each other and they also formerly intermarried. "The similarity between the words Mco and Mina," says Col. Powlett "suggests that the former may be a contraction of the latter." Col. Tod assigns the same etymology to the word Mina as that of Mera and Mairote all designating mountaineers from Mair or Mer a hill. "A distinction is made," says he, "in the orthography and pronunciation of the designation of this race. Mena meaning the Asil or unmixed class while Meena is that applied to the mixed."

There are, however, two classes of Minas in Marwar. Those living in the North-eastern parganas of Marot, Nawa and Sambhar, reckon themselves superior to those living in Southern parganas of Godwar and Jalor, who are called Dhedia-Minas. The two sections neither intermarry nor eat together.

The Minas of the North-eastern parganas belong to the same tribe as that found in Jaipur, which country they are said to have held previous to the advent of the Rajputs, and where they are still the hereditary guards and also perform the ceremony of tika or investiture for the new chief. They are generally of two classes, the Zemindari and the Choukidari; though Col. Powlett doubts there being any hard or fast line between the two. They are divided into different stock families, of whom, as stated in the Rajputana Gazetteer, some claim descent from a cross between Minas and Brahmans; the others mostly from a cross with Rajputs. Their claim to Rajput descent" says Mr. Ibbetson, "is probably well founded, though they are said to spring from an illegitimate son of a Rajput and in women's slang one woman is said to give mina (Mina dena) to another when she accuses her of illicit intercourse." Some of the Minas of Marot and Nawa, however, trace their descent from a Gujar clan called Khari, and declare to have come in Marwar from Dhundhár, their original home being the village Nandgón on the river Jumna. Though they generally follow the Rajput laws of marriage, still they perform the ceremony of Saradh on the Diwali festival as the Gujars do.

There are numerous clans of these Minas, of which 14 only are found in Marwar as noted below:—

- | | |
|---------------|-----------------|
| (1). Chhápilá | (2). Bansunwál. |
| (2). Jép | (9). Chitta. |
| (3). Jarwál | (10). Nogára. |
| (4). Bagri | (11). Sirá. |
| (5). Pakhi | (12). Bungráni. |
| (6). Bundus | (13). Chindrá. |
| (7). Mánótál | (14). Osár. |

They are the followers of Shaktik religion and worship Jivan-Mata which has its temple at village Riwasa in Jaipur, and which is believed to drink as many cups of liquor as may be brought before its mouth. The deity also finds its worshippers among other castes, besides the Minas. These Minas eat flesh, drink spirits and pay great attention to omens. They are said to be excellent cultivators.

The Minas of Godwar and Jalor or as they are called the Dhedia Minas, though large in numbers are lower in social standing than the Minas, of North-eastern parganas, and because they eat the flesh of cows, the other high caste members would not eat and drink from their hands. They are divided into numerous clans of which about 69 are found in Marwar.

Of these clans the Jawatra and Khoda Minas claim to be the Asli or unmixed and they represent the earlier tribes who, as the local tradition says, were the followers of Raja Sehsar-Báo who in time immemorial, is said to have taken shelter in the Aravali hills, for fear of Parasráj, when the latter determined to destroy the Kashatria class altogether.

The other Minas being largely of mixed blood claim irregular descent from the Rajputs, who after the overthrow of Chohan supremacy under Kanar Deo of Jalor sought refuge with the Minas and began to intermarry with them.

The Parihar Minas are said to have descended from Shoma, son of Nahar Rao, Raja of Mundor, who married a Mina woman, settled in the Kherar and became the progenitor of its present inhabitants and of others scattered over the adjacent districts. They are numerous in Bundi. They do not eat the cow and the wild boar. It is said that a former Parihar Prince was led to a stream near Pokur while pursuing a boar, the waters of which cured him from a loathsome disease. Since then the animal is considered sacred by all clans descended from the Parihars.

Other castes are also found to have mingled with the Minas, besides the Rajputs, as for instance the Ranawat, Kumhar, Kachi &c. which bear the names of some of the Mina clans. This alludes to the fact that the Minas while practising depredations used to carry away the persons they met with, to their hills without any distinction of caste and creed, and would not allow them to come back unless they were paid suitable ransom.

The Dhedia Minas, though not abstaining from the flesh of cows are all Hindus. They worship Devi, Bheron, and Mata, and make offerings of liquor, buffaloes, and goats to the latter. They have no order of priesthood, and their gurus are Gurrás, Rehbaris, and Bhils. They would never rob a Sargara who is their chief harbor. They esteem it a great compliment to be addressed by the name of Manji, and take it equally ill to be called as Kári which appellation is considered very low.

A grand fair called Mina-roj annually takes place at village Chhena in Sirohi in which all the Minas from Sirohi, Jalor and Mewar gather. It is held for seven days which are considered sacred, and during which period no Mina is said to commit a crime. Even the advertized offenders are not to be arrested, should any of them happen to be found in the fair. The origin of the fair is based on the following story:—

Of yore, a Mina used to go to the sacred Ganges, but when he died, the goddess appeared to him one day in a dream and promised to send him to his house, he being not required to travel a long distance. The Bhil people believe that the holy water really burst forth on the Min-Sank near Forest where the fair is presently held, and that in these days too the parganas, and jungles. It is believed that if one digs the ground, water comes out, in which the Minas bathe and throw the bones of their dead, which they specially bring with them for the purpose.

Another fair in honor of Mahadooji is also held on the 13th of Phagun, at Paota in Jalor where the Minas of a few adjoining villages assemble together.

Betrothals generally take place among the Minas, and at the time of marriage, the ceremonies of phera, chowri, and kom are also performed, the number of pheras being four instead of seven. Nata or Karewa is also allowed, but not in the same clan to which the widows, with late husband belonged. The new husband has to supply the widow a set of new clothes and white chura of lac and takes her home on Saturday night. The offsprings if any from the former husband, provided they accompany the widow, have not to change their clan, but are debarred from inheriting the property of their real father. The inheritance is generally divided in equal portions among the brothers, but if the partition is made during the life time of the father, the son living jointly with the latter usually gets a double share. Adoption is rarely made among the Minas, but in case of emergency even a son-in-law may be adopted. All their family disputes are generally settled by Punchayats whose orders they are bound to obey. Their chief head dress consists in a potia upon which a jaria is also wrapped. The women are not allowed to wear gold. Silver is used for hand and neck and brass for feet ornaments.

There are two sects among these Minas—Dasa and Bisa. But there is no distinction of caste between the two, and they also both intermarry. The chief points of difference, however, are that the former are invariably criminal, while the latter earn their livelihood by mazduri. The Dasa-punthis burn their dead, while the Bisa-Minas bury them and they are also regarded as Gurus by the former.

The Minas for generations were wholly given to robbery and general lawlessness, their national weapons being bows and arrows. From their very childhood they practised crime, and with a view to make themselves capable of bearing all kinds of hardship they used to walk bare-footed on thorns and bushes without minding the scorching heat of summer or the shivering cold of winter. Having thus undergone the preliminary training, formed Daragras or parties to commit robberies and dacoities on high. One of the followers who usually took his seat on the top of a keepwatch while his other companions were engaged in looting of Tunkia. He generally received a double share of the ^{spoils}. In time Dhedia the greater risk he used to undergo. If any follower ^{came} to the Minas, his loss was not to be openly mourned by his family ^{became} old Minas, ^{he} other law will explain the chief characteristics of this ^{at} the place. the absence of any special calling had made dacoity ^{then} the pride

"Padia before his capture in August and execution in November 1887, had been a scourge, for several years, to Marwar and its adjacent borders. He was a dacoit of dacoits—a veritable Rob Ray, expert as Tantia Bhil, but withal magnanimous like Robinhood. Padia committed many dacoities but confessed 33 and always managed, like his prototype Tantia, to elude the clutches of the police, notwithstanding special precautions were adopted to ensure the suppression of crime. His movements were mysterious: he was now here, now there; now a dacoit, next moment a Sadhu, then a coolie. In guises varied and many, he used to knock about in Marwar, and commit depredations as opportunities presented, hoodwinking the men who were in pursuit of him. But at last Nemesis overtook him. He was fifty years old when he was captured—a deformed, a sorry looking fellow—manned and one-eyed, but his bearing was orderly, his mind unhinged, his spirit boyant, be-speaking presence of an inert genius. Daring and adventurous as Padia was, his mother was quite an Amazon. She reproached the son, and flung away from him for his cowardice. "Why did you not kill yourself when you were captured," exclaimed this virago—fire darting from her eyes.

"Padia met his death on the scaffold with fortitude. Before his execution, he drank, ate and danced, quite unmindful of the doom that was on him. He fastened the rope himself and closed a life that was terror to Western Rajputana for several years."

But course of time has now refined the character of Minas, and they are more and more being persuaded to adopt peaceful habits. A glance at the latest annual report on the settlement of criminal tribes will show that a large number of Minas are cultivators, possessing about 63,290 Bigahs of land. The system of granting pattas, the introduction of choukidari, and the compensation out of lag-bag have greatly suppressed crime. Not long ago, a certain number of Minas in the district of Sojat had made an agreement between them swearing not to commit theft in future, and for this purpose erected a Gadotra or commemoration stone at village Chirpitia in confirmation of their promise. In the same way the Minas of Endla-Gudah, having joined the Kabir-punth led by one Rajia Thori have given up the use of flesh and liquor.

The Minas of Bhadrarjun had also been very troublesome and had ever maintained on the whole a semi-independence of the Darbár. Formerly they used to live in two Mewasas, one on the hill called the Barla-Mewasa, and the other at the foot of the hill called the Maila-Mewasa. The position of the former afforded a good refuge to the Minas after committing crime, and the Minas of the latter place had also easy access to the hills. But now under the new arrangement, the Minas of both the places are settled down on plains, binding themselves at the same time to lead a peaceful life. In short the efforts of the Darbar have gone a great way in taming the wild temper of the Minas, who are now on the whole, taking more and more to agricultural employment.

BHILS.

The Bhils were returned in Marwar as 66,962 out-numbering all the other Forest and Hill tribes of the group. They are found almost in all the parganas, and especially abound in the villages bordering on hilly tracts and jungles.

✓ They are a pre-Aryan race, and according to Col. Tod, the earliest people that inhabited Meywar. We also find traces of Bhils before the advance of the Aryans into the Deccan. A Bhil woman Sri Wata by name, is said to have made presents of some bers or plums to Rama (an incarnation of the deity) during his wanderings through the wilderness of Dandaka, which though tasted before and thereby defiled, but were accepted gracefully in consideration of the sincere love and regard, the woman entertained for the great hero of ancient Ayudhia, which fact is thus sung in a hymn—Bhilni ke ber Sudama ke tundol rach rach bhog lagayo, i. e. so kind and merciful is the Almighty Lord that he accepted with great pleasure the bers or plums presented by a Bhilni, and also feasted with equal delight on the cooked rice supplied by Súdama. Further we are told that "in the Adi-Parvan of the Mahabharata mention is made of a certain Bhil who had attained extraordinary mastery over the bow, practising the art by placing before him an image of clay of Drona Charrya, the preceptor of the Kurus and Pandus. Arjuna, the foremost warrior of the triple world, coming to hear of the marvellous skill of the Bhil requested his preceptor to ask the Bhil for the thumb of his right hand as a Dakshina. Drona did as his favourite pupil desired, and such was the regard the Bhil bore towards his preceptor, that he unhesitatingly cut off his thumb and laid it at the feet of Drona."

The name is believed to be derived from the Dravidian "Billu" a bow. The Bhils boast their descent from Mahadeo, "who, as stated by Dr. Hunter, had intercourse with a female he met in the woods, and by her, had many children. One of them ugly and vicious, killed his father's bull, and was banished to the mountains and forests. His descendants have since that time been called Bhils or out-castes."

The Bhils are divided into a variety of clans, of which many are found in Marwar; some of them are as noted below:—

(1) Dabi, (2) Margat, (3) Lekhia, (4) Gatar, (5) Dubal, (6) Gundi, (7) Goyal, (8) Rathora, (9) Parmar, (10) Chohan, (11) Daiya, (12) Lavatia, (13) Karwayá, (14) Alia, (15) Lidia, (16) Thededa, (17) Chūr, (18) Kalédá, (19) Karwa, (20) Bochia, (21) Solunkhi, (22) Bhati &c.

The first four clans claim to be the original or unmixed, others contain Rajput element in them, while some are apparently huddled together as a group by simple contiguity of habitation or by the banding together of neighbours for plunder or self defence.

✓ They profess the Shaktik religion and worship Chawanda, Mahadeo, and Mata (the deity of small-pox). They show much respect to a local deity named Pabu whom they are said to have accompanied on a large scale in his gallant expeditions. Almost every Bhil as a than in his house dedicated to him, and there are temples in many parts of Marwar, representing Pabu on horse back with a spear in his hand. The prodigies of valour performed by the hero are greatly celebrated in songs by the Bhils in their own dialects, but they are generally not very intelligible and at the same time unmelodious as the proverb says:—

Káin Charan ri chákri—kain Arún ri rákh.

Kain Bhil ro gaono—kain Satia ri sákh.

i. e. Service under a Cháran, the ashes of the Arun wood, the songs of the Bhils and the evidence of a Sathia (a low caste) are of very trifling consequences.

The Bhils live together in pals, which appear to be a scattered series of isolated huts. They usually follow the lead of some local head man or principal clansman. All cases and quarrels are settled by Punchayats, and any one disobeying the orders of the Panches is excluded from the community or has to pay a fine not exceeding Rs. 11. They are said to be very superstitious and strongly believe in ghosts and departed spirits, to keep which at a distance they generally wear charms and amulets. They have faith in witch-craft, and there are Bhopas or witch-finders in every large pal. Omens are also religiously believed in, and a cat crossing a Bhil's path when starting on any particular business will send him home again at once.

Lieutenant Mildmay thus remarks about their oaths and ceremonies:—"There are some oaths and ceremonies which no Bhil will venture to break. One is swearing by the dog; the Bhil, placing his hand on the head of the dog, prays that if what he says be not true, the curse of the dog may fall upon him. Another oath is sworn by taking a small quantity of joar into the hand and holding it up, praying that the grain he eats may bring curses and destruction on him, should he speak aught but truth. A third oath is sworn by placing the hand on the head of his son. In many instances when these oaths are made use of, written agreements are given by which the person swearing agrees that should any serious or extraordinary injury happens to himself or his family within a certain time, he will consent to be held guilty or to have stated a falsehood."

Among the Bhils, the name given to a child after birth has generally some connection with the hour and date of its birth, and in some cases it is named after the day of the week on which it was born.

Marriage among the Bhils is a question of concern to the father, who seeks out a bride for his son after arranging the dapa with her parents. About one fourth of the total expenses incurred on marriage by the bride's parents are usually paid to the latter by the bridegroom's father. Betrothals are first contracted, and the marriage generally takes place as soon as the girl arrives at puberty. They have their own priests who partake in the ceremony, but sometimes an elderly member of the bride's family officiates. After the usual ceremony of pheras, the bride is placed on the shoulder of each of her relations in turn and danced about till exhausted. The Bhils are very suspicious of their wives, who are generally very particular in their relations with the other sex.

The Bhils' widow can also contract Nata or Karewa. On the death of an elder brother, the next takes his widow, but an elder brother cannot take a younger's widow. She either returns to her parents or finds another husband in another got or clan.

The Bhils burn their dead generally in a reverse posture, but the babies and virgins and those who have died of small-pox are buried, and if within a certain time no one else dies of the disease it is disinterred and burnt. They believe that the spirits of the dead parent haunt places they lived in during lifetime. A few days after the death as described in the Rajputana Gazetteer, one of the deceased's relations often announces that he has been told in dream that the spirit rests on a certain hill, when the relatives erect a platform there, and deposit on it a quantity of liquor and rice. Ten or twenty days after the cremation, the friends of the deceased assemble at the house of the next of kin, who spends some forty rupees worth of liquor on the occasion. On their arrival a quantity of Indian corn is set to cook; and in the meantime the company shave one another and drink the liquor provided. When the corn is ready, the host gives each a dhák leaf full of it and dismisses them.—

After the death of a Bhil, his wife and his sons are the legitimate heirs, and in the absence of these two, the brothers succeed, but daughters and other female relations are not entitled to any share in the deceased's property.

The Bhils generally wear coarse cloths and their children remain almost naked for a number of years. They are very fond of ear-rings. Brass ornaments are generally worn by the women.

The Bhils form the lowest caste and are superior only to Mehtars or Bhangis, for, says Dr. Hunter, "when they cannot get grain, they feed on wild roots and fruits, on several kinds of vermin, on animals that have died a natural death, and probably in remote places on the flesh of the cow."

Though Bhils were formerly inveterate thieves and robbers, they are now losing that character possessing about 1,48,878 bigáhs of land, and act also as Shikaris, messengers and general servants. They also cut and sell grass, and manufacture baskets &c. In some villages they act as Dhunias or cotton cleaners.

There is another class called Bhilala which is a cross between a Bhil and Rajput, but it is not found in Marwar and is chiefly confined to the Vindhya range. The Bhilalas do not intermarry with the Bhils, nor can their widows make Nata or Karewa, as the Bhil women do.

GRASSIAS.

The Grassias were returned in Marwar as 4,040—males 2,123 and females 1,917. They are found in the district of Godwar only and are mostly residing in the villages of Siwana, Koyalbáo, Karon, Goria and Thuudi beri which lie along the Aravalli range. They have no other designation and go under the same name also in Meywar and Sirohi. There are also Grassias in Gujrát and Malwa, but they do not belong to this tribe, being Rajputs by caste, the term Grassia in Gujrát and Malwa corresponding to the Bhomas of Rajputana.

Grassia is derived from Gras which means a subsistence; literally and familiarly a mouthful. Col. Tod identifies the origin with the Celtic word Gwas, said to mean a servant. (In the Gazetteer of Rajputana they are stated to be half-breeds being the descendants of Rajputs who were married to Bhil women, but they themselves generally deny being in any way connected with the Bhil tribe.) The local tradition however, says that after the defeat of Kanar Deo, the Chohan Raja of Jalor by the Turks in about S. year 1388 the Rajputs were forced to take themselves to hills, where they overpowered the Bhils, the aboriginal tribe that inhabited the tract, made Kanar Deo's son Rao of Merpura to whom they still owe allegiance, and settled there on grant of subsistence or Gras, and are therefore called Grassias. The other Rajputs living on the plains, looked down upon them as degraded and ceased to have matrimonial connections with them. Thus the name came to be applied to a separate set or group of persons thus associated. They have got their own internal gots and rank below the Rajputs and above the Bhils in social order. The Rajput clan names found among them are the Sisodia, Chohan, Punwar, Solunkhi, Parihar, and Mori who trace their lineage to the Yadu family.

(The Grassias worship Siva, Bheron and Devi which are their chief deities. Their priests are called Bhopas who are generally of their own caste and Brahmans also take part in their ceremonies. They are said to hold all animals sacred that are of a white colour whether cow, sheep or goat.) The reason of this is stated to be that at some remote time, fire once broke out in the hills inhabited by the Grassias, by which a large number of animals and quadrupeds was burnt. Among them there was also a white bullock, which being half-burnt could not be distinguished, and the Grassias taking the animal for a stag feasted on it to their satisfaction. But when the real fact was revealed, they felt extremely repentant and from that time began to entertain special regard for all animals of white colour.

Holi and Gungor are the chief festivals observed by the Grassias. The former is celebrated with great eclat, men and women dancing close together by parties. The latter is also observed with equal rejoicings, the females dancing in rings called Ghumar, with green plants of barley over their heads while the males dance round them, playing pipes and beating drums.)

have their own songs which are understood by no one else except the Bhils. The subject treated in these songs chiefly refers to trees and birds.

The Grassias also believe in omens. Whenever they have to do any thing, they first go to the temple of Bheronji and Mataji, and make offerings of wheat, barley and maiz. The Pujari or as it is generally called the Bhapa returns some corn to them which they count. If the number corresponds to what was desired, the work is undertaken, otherwise it is abandoned altogether.

Marriage among the Grassias is generally performed in three ways. The first is that called Mor-bandhia, in which all the ceremonies of phera chowri and mor are duly observed, as among the ordinary Hindus; the Brahmans being also required to take part. The second kind is that called Pehraono which is performed only by a nominal observance of the ceremony of pheras, no Brahmans being required to attend. The third way is that termed Tanana in which no betrothal takes place, and the ceremonies of Chowri and Phera are altogether omitted. The boy seeks out a bride for himself while tending cattle in the jungle where he touches the girl he selects to be his wife. The engagement is then announced to the parents of the girl by the boy himself or his parents. A few days after the announcement, the parents of the bride collect the Punches and the village headmen commonly called Sailots, who settle the Dapa or marriage fee which usually consists of 12 calves and 12 pieces of cloth, and is paid to the parents of the bride by the other party, beside the remuneration of the Punches and Sailots which does not exceed one calf and one piece of cloth for each. After the Dapa is settled the bridegroom takes the bride to his home. In some instances, however, the girl instead of being touched by her future husband in the jungle is taken home without any intimation to her parents; who missing her, set out with a contingent of few retainers, to search for her. When the girl is thus traced, stones are thrown over the house of the party in fault. The Punches and the headmen then intervene and reconcile the parties by arranging Dapa as described before. The payment of Dapa is not always instantaneous, it may be realized after two generations.

Nata or Karewa is also allowed, and a Grassia can even take a married woman for his wife on payment of Dapa to her living husband. Even a nephew can take his aunt to be his wife, and the same may be done by an uncle in the case of his nephew's wife.

The Grassias burn their dead. On the subsequent meeting of relations on the twelfth day, meat and dalya of maiz is served. It is called Kandhia. Masor is performed whenever one can afford it.

The mode of inheritence among the Grassias is the same as with other Hindus, all the brothers receiving equal portions. The sisters get no.

~The Grassias have their huts separately built on hills. No other castes reside in their villages except the Bhils who form their Rayots. Each village has its separate hereditary headman or Sailot who occupies the position of a Thakur and his orders are implicitly obeyed. Their chief occupation is cultivation, but they are not very industrious. As long as they have maiz in store, which forms their staple food, they do not care for any thing, but when the stock is exhausted they live only by selling fire-wood and grass, although their hills abound in honey and mosley which they leave for the Bhils to deal with. ~They are not addicted to predatory habits and are always found honest and true. ~They quietly pay their rent on fixed terms to Raj officials who visit their villages twice a year. No body dare to take away any thing out of their villages without their permission. If one does so, the general belief is that he would either die or fall sick, unless he makes a present of some clothes and a red turban to the owner who is supposed to cure the sufferer instantaneously by spitting over his body, and for this reason the Grassias are believed to have a hand in witch-craft.

The Grassias are simple and mild, and in appearance like Rajputs. They are always found armed with bows and arrows. They drink liquor, and opium is largely consumed, and is a chief medium of reconciliation between parties at dispute. The old men are generally much respected especially by the females.

The ordinary dress of a Grassia consists of a long rag round the head, a waist-cloth and a Dhoti. The females often use black Ghagra and wear lac churas on the arms, and silver or brass bangles on the legs. Gold and silver necklets are also worn. Cotton is not made use of even in the winter season when fire-wood is only burnt which is called Si-rakha i. e. protecting from the cold.

CHAPTER III.

CLASS B.—PROFESSIONAL.

PRIESTS.

The group of priestly castes consists of three classes viz., (1) the Hindu priests or Brahmins (2) the Mohamedan priests or Sayads and (3) the Jain priests or the Jatis; and bears a proportion of 34·3 per cent to the total number of the professional class and of 7·34 per cent to the total population of Marwar. The figures for these classes are given below:—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Brahmins	...	105,876	96,374	202,260
Sayads	...	2,016	1,744	3,760
Jatis	...	624	210	834
<hr/>
Total	...	108,516	98,328	206,844

BRAHMINS.

The following abstract will show the sub-divisions of Brahmins in Marwar as returned in the present census, including also the figures for Joshi, Dakot, and Acharaj excluded from the priestly group and shown as separate under the head of Astrologers in the Census Table.

		Males.	Females.	Total.
(1) Chheniát	...	25,384	24,611	49,995
(2) Pushkarná	...	8,771	9,174	17,945
(3) Srimáli	8,318	8,316	16,634
(4) Pirohit	31,081	24,580	55,661
(5) Dákot	2,646	2,547	5,193
(6) Joshi	1,393	1,345	2,738
(7) Acharáj...	...	566	649	1,215
(8) Others	32,322	29,693	62,015
<hr/>
Total	...	110,481	100,915	211,396

The proportion of Brahmins to the total population of Marwar comes up to 8·39 per cent. They are the third most numerous caste in Marwar being out-numbered by the Jats and Rajputs only. To attempt a description of their origin and rise as well as their sub-divisions into numerous clans, and innumerable gatrás would be a useless task, as the subject has been fully treated by eminent authors of Indian histories. The highest rank, the Brahman occupies among Hindus, the intellectual superiority he exercises over other castes, and the veneration that runs for him through the whole social as well as religious life of a Hindu, are matters that admit of no question. According to Mr. Ibbetson, "no child is born, named, betrothed or married; no body dies or is burnt, no journey is undertaken or auspicious day selected; no house is built, no agricultural operation of importance begun, or harvest gathered in, without the Brahmans being feed and fed: a portion of all the produce of the field is set apart for their use, they are consulted in sickness and in health, they are feasted in sorrow and in joy."

"The Brahmans of all tribes" says Revd. M. A. Sherring, are originally descended from seven Rishis or sages. Each of these Rishis stands at the head of a great division, the various members of which are further subdivided into sections termed gotras or classes. Intermarriage has played a great part in the creation of new gotras among the Brahmans, and it is generally believed on the authority of Manu, that many new tribes were continually being created by the intercourse of Brahmans with woman of other castes. Generally speaking there are two great divisions of Brahmans based on their geographical distribution. Those, who took for their residence the tracts lying north of Vindhîachal range, were called Gour; while those who migrated towards the Deccan assumed the name of Deravar. Each of these divisions is again sub-divided into five groups or sections. The first division consists of (1) Sarsut, (2) Kankubj (3) Gour (4), Methal and (5) Utkal, called the "Punch Gour," and the second comprises:—(1) Deravar, (2) Tailang, (3) Karnâta, (4) Maharashtra and (5) Gurjura, called the "Punch-Deravar."

The Brahmans of Marwar belong to both the divisions. Their original profession was to read the sacred Vedas or to discharge religious duties, but now they are found to be Jack of all trades. In Marwar they are mostly cultivators, while others are employed in Raj service.

The manners and customs of the Brahmans of Marwar are materially the same, though they do not intermarry; the ceremonies of betrothal also differing in different tribes. The custom of Nata or Kerewâ is not permissible among them.

Property is equally divided among the Brahmans between the sons on the death of the father. As a rule, daughter's sons do not inherit but the Srimali Brahmans failing male-issue of their own, adopt daughter's sons.

CHHENIAT.

The Chheniat Brahmans consists of six different tribes viz., (1) the Daimâ, (2) the Gour, (3) the Gujar Gour, (4) the Parik (5) the Khundelwâl, and (6) the Sârsut. Their aggregate number forms nearly one-fourth part of the total Brahman population in Marwar.

Tradition assigns the organization of the system of Chheniat to Maharaja Sawai Jey Singh of Jeypur, who is said to have got up, some 150 years ago, the ceremony of the "Aswamedha Yuga" or sacrifice of the horse, a virtual assumption of universal supremacy, in which he invited all the Brahmans of different countries and requested them to eat together, thus attempting to unite them as one. The Brahmans, on the other hand, proved too rigid to be trespassers on sacred ground or to poach on their home preserve. But the Maharaja was vain enough to introduce some reform in commemoration of the grand event he had undertaken. He thereby forced the Brahmans of his own country to unite as one, and thus the six tribes noted above, who ate together, came to be called as Chheniat. It did not, however, effect upon their manners and customs which remain up to present as varied as before. They can only eat together, but they do not intermarry. As the Brahmans of Marwar had also taken part in the ceremony, the system of Chheniat also prevails here, but since the last 50 years, the "Gour Brahmans" have been excluded from the Chheniat community of Marwar, as the latter have begun to intermarry with Sikhwal Brahmans, who have no objection to eating bread from the hands of the Mahajans.

The Daima.

The Daimá Brahmans form the majority among the Chheniat. They trace their lineage to Dudhich Rishi. Many of their sub-divisions in Marwar are named after the villages in the Nagor District, such as Asopa, Kasalya, Kathor, Anáná, Dubariá, Didwania &c. They follow Sumartik religion, or Punchayatan Puja, i. e. worshipping the five deities—Shiva, Vishnu, Shakti, Ganesh and Suraj together. Their "Kuldevi" or family deity is called "Dudh-Muth" of which there is a temple at village Manglod in Nagor, where a large fair is annually held in honor of the deity in the month of Asoj.

The marriage ceremonies or funeral rites are almost the same among the Daimás as are among other Brahmans. In some villages, however, the dead body of an old man is usually carried in a sitting posture.

The Daimás do not eat flesh, nor do they drink water from a well in or near a mosque. Their females usually wear two "Dupattas" or sheets when they go out, and generally tie an extra piece of cloth over their "Ghágá" or petticoat. They do not fetch water as other women do, and also do not use glass "Churas" but ivory ones.

The Daimás form the literate class of Brahmans in Marwar, as a saying runs—"Behná puchh bháve Daimá puchh," i. e. say either a Daimá or a learned one, both mean the same thing. Their chief occupation is to read "Vedas" or to recite "Kathas." The system of Punchayat is observed chiefly among the "Kasalyás," "Asopás" and "Kathor," whose elderly members are termed "Biás." The Asopa Brahmans chiefly prefer Ráj service, and they are said to have held important posts of Durbar Vakil at the Mahratta court and with the earlier British Residents at Delhi.

The Gour.

The Gour Brahmans though forming the fountain-head of numerous Brahmanical tribes are found in very small number in Marwar. They state they have come from Gour in Bengal, but Sir, H. M. Elliot regards it improbable for the whole tribe of Gour to have not only left their native seats but to have crossed through the country of the Kanoujiás and dwelt on the other side of them. The Revd. M. A. Sherring in quoting the tradition of the Gour Taga Brahmans an off-shoot of the Gour, who officiated on the occasion of Raja Janamayaji ordering a sacrifice for the destruction of serpents as referred to in the "Mahabhartá" asserts that their original seat was Haryana in the Punjab from which they spread out into other parts. General Cunningham suggests that Gour is the old name of "Gonda," while Sir George Campbell in his Ethnology of India makes the word as a mere abbreviation of "Guggar" or Ghargur, a chief tributary of the Sarswati. According to the local tradition they trace their descent from Galub Rishi, and declare they have originally come from Bengal with Rájá Mán Singh of Jeypur during the reign of Akbar. They are divided into 1444 clans of which very few are found in Marwar. They profess Vishnuism. Though they state they have come from Bengal they abstain from the use of meat and fish. They are very rigid in preserving the purity of their caste. They are generally not literate and mostly subsist on private service.

The Gujar Gour.

The Gujar Gour from an offshoot of the Gour Brahmans, tracing their descent from Gotam Rishi. Their original home in Marwar was the village "Gorái" which, from its being in the vicinity of Guzrat, gave the tribe the name of Gujar Gour. They are divided into four "Gotras" and have got 84 khamps or sub-divisions. They are followers of Shiva, some also worshipping Vishnu, and are the Prohits of Maheshri Mahájans. The same customs and manners prevail among them as are in vogue with the Gour Brahmans, though they can not intermarry with the latter.

The Parik.

The Parik Brahmans trace their lineage to a Rishi named Párasur. They are said to have come in Marwar from the North-Western Provinces, and settled for the first time in Sambhar and Nagor. They are divided into 103 khamps or sub-divisions of which many are found in Marwar. They follow Vishnu, and worship Balab-Kul or Sampardháí. They differ in their marriage ceremony from other Brahmanical tribes in the fact that they supply Chura to the bride after the ceremony of "phera" is performed, and it is also optional with them to reject the betrothal when once contracted. Their chief occupation is to do "puja," but those living in the country are generally cultivators, others employing themselves in private service.

The Khundelwal.

The Khundelwál Brahmans originally came as is generally believed by them from Khundela in Jeypur named after their ancestor the Khundel Rishi. They are divided into 52 clans of which very few are found in Marwar, and their names are mostly after the villages they dwell in. They are chiefly engaged in private service, a very small number being also cultivators.

The Sarsut.

The Sarsut Brahmans take their name from the River Sarswati in the Punjab to which province they properly belong. In Marwar a different origin is however alleged. The tradition says that Brahma had a daughter named Sarswati who was married to Dudhich Rishi from whom a son was born and named Sarásur. His descendants came to be called Sársut. They are said to have come in Marwar from Kanowj with Rao Siaji. In Mallani they came from Bikanere, and are the Pirohits of the Jàts. They are divided into 52 clans or "Khamps" of which the chief found in Marwar are (1) Badar, (2) Bara Ojah, (3) Chhota Ojah, (4) Gulgirá, (5) Patak, (6) Joshi, (7) Moth, and (8) Táona.

They are the followers of Shiva but are not rigid in their observance of caste-rules. They can eat and smoke with Banyas, Khattris, or Kayasths, and in the hills of the Punjab they also eat flesh. They are said to be the earliest and most simple and pure Hindus of vedic faith, and are described by Sir John Malcolm as forming a considerable proportion of the most industrious cultivators in Malwa. In Marwar they also cultivate but mostly live on charity.

THE PUSHKARNA.

The Pushkarna Brahmans form one of the sub-divisions of the Gurjars, the fifth tribe of the Puncu-Deravar Brahmans. They bear a proportion of 8.46 per cent to the total Brahman population of Marwar and form the third most numerous class of Brahmans, only the Pirohits and the Chheniat community exceeding them in number. "They get their name," says Mr. John Wilson "from the lake of Pushkar or Pohkar near Ajmere." Speaking of their origin, Col. Ted says, "it is said that they were Beldars, and excavated the sacred lake of Pushkar or Pohkar for which act they obtained the favor of the deity and the grade of Brahmans with the title of Pohkarna. Their chief object of emblematic worship, the Khudali, a kind of pickaxe used in digging seems to favor this tradition." Little or no importance is, however, attached to this tradition by the Brahmans of Marwar, who relate a different story of their forming a new class under the name of Pushkarnas. They say that they originally belonged to Sindh and their first representatives are said to have been collected at Sirimal now called Bhinmal in the Jaswantpura district, where a large number of Brahmans from different parts had assembled to celebrate the marriage of Luchshimi with Bhagwan, in the house of Bhargu Rishi. Some dispute arose in the ceremony. It was proposed to place the tilak first on the forehead of Gautam Rishi, and then on the others. The Sindhi Brahmans objected to it, and the followers of Gautam pronounced imprecations on them. They left the place and were assisted in having a revenge by a female demon named Sarka, who used to visit Sirimal and take away the daughters of the Brahmans at the time of their marriage. The dissenting parties were afterwards reconciled by one Raja Punj who styled the Sindhi Brahmans as Pushkarna from the word Pushi or support they rendered in matters of religion. Sarka is now called Unta-devi from riding on a camel, and is worshipped by the Pushkarnas as a deity.

The Pushkarnas are said to have come to Marwar from Sindh to which place their language has a close affinity. They are numerous in Pokaran. They are tall and athletic and are generally found bearded. Though they are very clever in making intrigues, but at the same time they boast of being always faithful to those whom they serve. They have little concern with any trade and chiefly follow agriculture, but a large proportion of their urban population is employed in Raj service. "The members of this caste," says Col. Walter, rose to eminence during the reign of Maharaja Takhat Singh and held the offices of Diwan and Bukshli."

There are 14 Gotras and 84 clans among the Pushikarnas, each Gotra having two separate Kuldevis or family deities. They can marry in their own Gotra, the distinction of Kuldevi being only observed.

The following is a detail of their Gotras and clans with names of family deities.

Gotra.	Kuldevi.	Clans.
1 Bharadawaj...	{ Jajla—Kakrecha, Chamunda—Kupta or Bohra,	Tungsal or Bias , Chulra,	Muthar Achara
2 Sandlus ...	{ Daru—Bodha or Pirohil, Sukhmana—Kada,	Hedao, Kirta,	Múchar Nowla.
3 Gautam ...	{ Shivda—Keolia, Subhudra—Madha,	Joshi, Godana,	Madhu. Gotama
4 Upmanus ...	{ Sakhumbari—Thukar, Singhbaheni—Buttu,	Kundel, Mahatma,	Dota. Bujar.
5 Kapul ...	{ Jaya—Kavasthalia, Sangi—Mula or Gathia,	Kolani, Joshi,	Jur. Jut.
6 Chundarhas...	{ Sanatun—Dugra, Sukhmana—Parmen,	Petha, Jconewa,	Rama. Lapusia.
7 Lodun ...	{ Biturna—Baiti, Shunkarseni—Ambha,	Mertal, Puchhtara,	Kupli. Parecha.
8 Parasur ...	{ Chamunda—Chotia, Mahakali—Ojah,	Harush, Bajah,	Punia. Jbud.
9 Kashyap ...	{ Dharajogni—Borah, Rakatdunti—Kai,	Lodah, Karman,	Mumatia. Ludhir or Kalla .
10 Haritus ...	{ Sunchai—Runga, Sárdá—Achu,	Ramdeo , Sosdhara,	Upadhia . Tak or Mulda .
11 Sunkus ...	{ Asapuri—Bisa, Katyaini—Tetur,	Bigai, Rutta,	Birang. Bulla.
12 Buchehhus...	{ Sheopirya—Muttur. Sukhmana—Buchehha,	Muchehhur, Somnath,	Pariharia. Tihosia.
13 Kavsus ...	{ Ruktambur—Kavaria, Haripirya—Basu,	Kirayat, Kirar,	Bias . Chura.
14 Mudgal ...	{ Ruktadunti—Gota, Jugnaika—Sokra,	Siha, Khis,	Godana. Buhara.

N. B.—The clans in Italics are found in Jodhpore.

The Pushkarnas are Shivites by religion, a few also worship Vishnu and Shakti. Betrothals among them are generally contracted through the medium of their females, and they can reject it if desired. No money is taken on the occasion of betrothal or marriage of a daughter. The most remarkable feature of the marriage ceremony among them is, that it takes place on one and the same day in a year for the whole community, which fact adds greatly to the magnificence of the affair in a locality. They observe eight phéras or perambulations. In the first four rounds, the bridegroom is followed by the bride, then the former takes the latter in his arms and walks four times round the fire.

The funeral rites among the Pushkarnas are rather more expensive than other ceremonies. The near relations are fed for ten days and on the twelfth day, the inviting of the whole community is considered more necessary than on occasions of joy. The system of shaving heads prevails to an extreme degree among them. Even the remotest relations are bound to get themselves shaved on the demise of their kinsman.

The Pushkarnas have their various sub-divisions, the chief of which are—the Pirohits, the Bias, the Joshis, the Kallas, the Bobras, the Upadhas &c.

The Pirohits were formerly called Bodhas and they hold hereditary office of state to perform all the ceremonies on occasions of deaths amongst members of the ruling family. They are divided into several clans. When the Jodhpore fort was built by Rao Jodha, a Pirohit, as is generally believed cut his finger and sprinkled the blood in the foundation, uttering a blessing for the stability of the Rathor power as long as the Pushkarnas would exist. His descendants are called Potra-Pirohit. The Khetarpalias are the descendants of Khetarpal who was a Pushkarna Brahman. He is said to have been the Pirohit of the Bhati Rajputs, and had accompanied Rani Phulade of Jesulmere when she was married to Rao Satalji of Marwar and whose name is still known in connection with the Phulekéo tank. Khetarpal was murdered in an affray and is worshipped under the name of Khetarpal Bherun. He has a Than for him in the Jodhpore city near the school building where he was killed. The Siri-Pirohits or the Gherwanis as they are generally called, are also known by the name of Rathors. The story current about them is that when Marwar was taken by Aurangzeb, Maharaja Ajit Singh who was then a minor, was brought up for a period of more than ten years, under the care of one Jugguji, for which service he was created a Pirohit, and awarded a high Taxim or distinction in court. The young Maharaja was so greatly attached to the Pirohit that he was regarded as a brother by him, and for this reason, his descendants came to be called as Rathors, and they mostly follow their manners and customs.

The Bias is also an hereditary office holder of state. "He performs," as Col. Walter describes, "all the religious ceremonies in which the Maharaja himself has to take part such as that of installation to the Gaddi, marriages &c." Parda system is observed in the families of these incumbents. They have their several sub-divisions. The Nathawat Bias are the descendants of Tapaji, who was made Bias by Rao Maldeo, and who laid the foundation of Tapi Baori, the most ancient artificial reservoir in the Jodhpore city. It was completed by his son Natha, after whom the clan takes its name. The Nathawat females generally wear two dupattas or sheets and do not go out to fetch water. The Girdharot Bias are the descendants of Girdharji who is said to have accompanied Raja Amar Singh to Agra against the Mohamedan army, fell there in a battle and is worshipped as Girdhār pir. He has a than near Tapi Baori in Jodhpore. The Tij or the third day of Sawan on which he died is observed as a day of mourning by his posterity. The females do not wear new clothes nor do they employ themselves in grinding or weaving on that day. The Chatani Bias do not wear turban during the Holi festival, and wrap a Polia or a piece of cloth round their heads. They go under the impression that some one of their clan is sure to die during the festival. The reason assigned is that one of their ancestors had at very early time, shown some disrespect to the goddess who still continues to revenge upon his posterity. As they abound in Jodhpore, the idea often appears to be true either by some natural cause or an accident. The Juna Bias were originally Pirohits, but they do not intermarry with them. Formerly their title was Joshi, now they are called Bias.

The Joshis are likewise divided into several clans. The Chandwani Joshis were originally Pirohits. Their ancestor, Busdeo is said to be the first Pirohit of the Jeysulmere Rawal named Deo Rāj Bhati who being pursued by a Mahomedan army in about Sambat year 900, sought refuge with Busdeo, and the latter with a view to deceive the Mahomedan sepoys gave his own clothes, and Jeneu (sacred thread) to the refugee and allowed one of his sons named Ratnaji to take meals in company with him. Rawal was thus saved, but Ratnaji was declared to be an out-caste. He was consequently made a Barhut by the Rawal, and his descendants came to be called Rātnu Charans. The descendants of Busdeo came to Marwar during the time of Rao Maldeo, and when the latter visited Jeysulmere to marry a daughter of the Rawal, the Bhatīs determined to murder him. One Raghuji Pirohit is said to have revealed the secret to Maldeo, who took his saviour with him to Marwar, and from that time his descendants ceased to be the Pirohits of the Bhatīs. The family devoted itself to the science of astronomy and came to be called Joshis. Chundu, the son of Raghuji has been a great astronomer and his Chundu Panchanak or almanic has a wide renown throughout India. The Chundwani Joshis are said to bear a long standing enmity with the Chatani Bias, though they freely intermarry now. The saying runs:—

Adh bér Dukkhan né Dilli.

Adh bér Musa né Billi.

Adh bér Kaguz né Kutta.

Adh bér Chundu né Chutta.

i. e. there exists a very ancient enmity between a Chundwani Joshi and a Chatani Bias as is found between Dukkhan and Delhi, mouse and cat, as also paper and scissors. The Chotia Joshis are said to have come to Jodhpore during the time of Raja Udey Singh. They do not observe the Holi festival, nor do they like to see its flame, as they believe that one of their ancestors, had formerly been a victim to it. Every one is aware of the horrid tale of an Arya-Punthi Brahman on whose virgin daughter, as Col. Tod mentions, Raja Udey Singh had cast an eye. "In order to save her from pollution," says Col. Tod, "he dug a sacrificial pit, and having slain his daughter, cut her into fragments, and mingling therewith pieces of flesh from his own person, made the homa or burnt sacrifice to Aya-Mata and as the smoke and flame ascended, he pronounced an imprecation on the Raja. Let peace be a stranger to him! and in three pahars, three days, and three years let me have revenge!" Then exclaiming. "My future dwelling is the Dabi Baori (properly Tapi Baori) sprung into the flaming pit." The same shade who haunted the imagination of the Raja, is believed to have his residence in Tapi Baori, and for this reason no body dares to go down the reservoir alone, but it forms an exception in the case of a Chotia Joshi whose ancestor named Bun-Mali is said to have overpowered the spirit and taken a promise from him not to harm his descendants. One Baluji a Chotia Joshi, who was the Hakim of Merta district, during Maharaja Bijoy Singh's reign is said to have introduced the system of Dal being given with flour in a Petia or a grant of one day's food, which was not the case before.

The Kalla Brahmins regard themselves free from the effect of Bhiras-pat or Jupiter when it sinks down. No restrictions are observed by them during the period of its disappearance as are binding upon other castes. They believe that one of their ancestors had taken the star down on earth and had obtained a promise from it not to be inauspicious to his posterity. Another work of respect for them in society is that they are never alluded to in abusive songs by the Patars or dancing girls, notwithstanding any great temptation which might be offered to them for the purpose. The reason alleged is that the Patars are said to have accompanied the Kallas from Jeysulmere to Phalodi and were also maintained by them. One Chundan Kalla has been a man of celebrity, and is worshipped at Jeysulmere. His followers generally wear a thread in his name, which is believed to serve as an antidote to snake and dog bites.

The Bohras have also their many sub-divisions, and are regarded as guides in matters of Niat or caste feast. They make estimates of all catables and their decisions are acted upon by the members of the whole community.

Of the Upadhias, there are two divisions. Those connected with the Kabutar-khana or the Darbar pigeon house are considered as out-caste, and cannot intermarry with their high caste members.

THE SIRIMALI BRAHMAN.

The Sirimalis claim connexion with the Punch-Deravar Brahmans being a sub-division of the Gurjars. They bear a proportion of 7·86 per cent to the total Brahman population of Marwar and stand next to Pushkarnas in respect of number. "They derive their designation," says Mr. John Wilson from the town of Shrimal now called Bhinmal lying to the N. W. of Abu and intermediate between that mountain and the river Luni. Their dialect has a close resemblance to the Gujrati tongue, from which place they are said to have come to Marwar. They are generally known by the name of Gujrati Brahmans in other parts of India. Their wide dispersion has divided them into several divisions called Amnai, the chief of which, as found in Marwar are the Marwari Sirimalis and the Meywari Sirimalis. But "they are not indisposed," says Mr. John Wilson to intermarry with one another. Subsequently there were formed, not more than a century ago, two more Amnais called Rikh and Latkan, the organization of which is attributed to the fact that a Sirimali Brahman of Merta town in Marwar, had murdered his wife, and was consequently excluded from the caste. But being a man of substance, he celebrated a grand feast to which a large number of Brahmans was invited. Those who joined the ceremony were designated as Rikh Amnai, and the other were called Latkan. There is, however, no restriction of eating together or intermarrying between them. They have got 14 Gotras which belong to two divisions founded on the Vedas they profess. The first seven are called Yajurvedis and the remaining are designated as Samavedis. Each Gotra has one Kuldevi, and it is for this reason, that the Sirimalis, unlike the Pushkarnas, do not marry in their own Gotra. They are also divided into 84 Autanks or sub-divisions such as Joshi, Bohra or Bias named chiefly with reference to the particular locality they lived in, or on account of the particular profession they took to, in course of time. The following is a detail of their Gotras and clans with names of family deities :—

Gotra.	Kuldevi.	Clans.
1 Bharadawaj...	Bundukshani ...	(1) Ojah Bhopal, (2) Bias Bhopal, (3) Tirwari Bhopal, (4) Joshi Bhopal, (5) Tirwari Unamna, (6) Tirwari Bhian, (7) Tirwari Chokhachur, (8) Tirwari Nirnakirod, (9) Ojah Nolakha, (10) Davé Pharia, (11) Bias Nolakha, (12) Davé Narécha, (13) Bohra Peta, (14) Joshi Pavaria.
2 Sandlas ...	Khemkuria ...	(1) Davé Kiria, (2) Bohra Dhandalwari, (3) Bohra Kiria, (4) Bohra Pundia.
3 Gautam ...	Arashtavivja ...	(1) Davé Lumpova, (2) Davé Sanchalvaria, (3) Thakur Lapsa, (4) Davé Punchhterora, (5) Davé Gautamia, (6) Joshi Gautamia.
4 Kapul ...	Survi ...	(1) Davé Panolia, (2) Davé Dalvata, (3) Davé Mutaramnecha, (4) Davé Pumanecha, (5) Davé Jiwanecha, (6) Davé Pharia, (7) Thakur Bheria, (8) Ojah Bundhalia, (9) Davé Manaputrepatak, (10) Thakur Kapijul.
5 Chundarhas...	Mahalukshimi ...	(1) Davé Hadiarnakelwaria, (2) Davé Váturia, (3) Joshi Váturia.
6 Lodun ...	Chuwanda ...	(1) Davé Kochar, (2) Davé Pathak, (3) Bias Kochar.
7 Buchchhus ...	Bálgori ...	(1) Tirwari Daso, (2) Davé Kurneria, (3) Tirwari Sunga, (4) Joshi Parecha, (5) Awastia Jenotuni.
8 Upmanus ...	Nagnecha ...	(1) Tirwari Mer.
9 Parasur ...	Vatyakshani ...	(1) Tirwari Gadeh, (2) Bias Gadeh, (3) Tirwari Narécha, (4) Tirwari Jekhalia, (5) Ojah Chundesha.
10 Kashyap ...	Yogeshvaria ...	(1) Tirwari Jajdola, (2) Tirwari Ayachi, (3) Tirwari Kashyapi Dehwaria, (4) Tirwari Vatsuhalia, (5) Joshi Paorotra, (6) Joshi Chundesha, (7) Joshi Punchulia, (8) Bias Bhanbut, (9) Tirwari, Lorchacharia, (10) Bias Purecha, (11) Tirwari Karchunda, (12) Bohra Jajdola.
11 Haritus ...	Sidh Chawanda...	(1) Ojah Acharia.
12 Sunkus ...	Varunarchi ...	(1) Tirwari Tokar, (2) Tirwari Bakulia, (3) Ojah Bakulia, (4) Davé Unamna, (5) Bias Dibla, (6) Ojah Tokar, (7) Bias Bakulia, (8) Davé Mutkar, (9) Tirwari Salgra, (10) Tirwari Jekhalia.
13 Kavasus ...	Kamleshuri ...	(1) Ojah Sulia, (2) Tirwari Sulia, (3) Tirwari Kanodra, (4) Awasti Kanodra, (5) Joshi Nartecha, (6) Thakur Nartecha.
14 Mudgal ...	Varanunna ...	(1) Davé Dutia, (2) Davé Velaria, (3) Davé Chopaneria, (4) Davé Godchi.

The Sirimalis are mostly followers of Shiva; their chief deity or Kuldevi being Maha-Lukhshimi. Some marriage ceremonies among them are also peculiar to their own caste. When the bridegroom goes to touch the Torun in the bride's house, he is accompanied by his mother, and the latter together with the mother of the bride walks four times round the Chowri. The next day, the bridegroom wraps a Dhoti or loose cloth instead of rich dress and ornaments, goes to his father-in-law's house, and takes four rounds with his bride. The day following, he takes the bride in his arms, and again takes her four times round the fire. Nata or Kurewa is not allowed among them.

Property is equally divided among the Sirimalis, and in the absence of an heir, the son of a daughter is also adopted. Petty disputes are generally settled through the Punchayat. They are always very scrupulous about their ceremonial purity, and do not eat food or drink water brought by any other than their own caste. They also do not eat garlic, carrot, onion, and musurpulses. They do not put their cooked food in an iron, brass, or earthen pot, nor do they make use of cloth and Bur, Peepul or Ak leaves for the purpose. The use of liquor or tobacco is strictly prohibited.

They chiefly act as priests and take part in the marriage and funeral ceremonies of the Hindus. They remember the verses of the Vedas by rote, though now without understanding them. But they once produced the greatest Pundits among them, and as Mr. John Wilson says, "the celebrated Sanskrit poet Magha who is said to have lived in the times of Bhej Raja belonged to their fraternity." They are not cultivators, and as Col. Walter remarks, "they go from house to house begging for grain. They are so fond of begging that a Brahman of their caste, who is said to have been, at some time past, made a pargana officer in Marwar could not help enquiring if his Petia or grant of a day's food was inserted in the order of his appointment. They also trade on a small scale, and lend money privately thereby collecting immense sums. But they do not use money during their life time, though they spend a good deal in funeral ceremonies for which there runs a saying—" Sirimali Jetan kamave aur muan khave."

THE PIROHITS.

The Pirohits form the highest proportion among the Brahmans. They are for the most part, the Zemindars in Marwar, holding extensive land under Sasan given to them in charity by the Rajas and other big Jagirdars, of whom they claim to be the hereditary priests. They are chiefly employed in seeking husbands for the daughters of Rajputs, in attending at the ceremonies of betrothal and marriage, and in officiating as Pirohits on the occasion of instalation or succession of an heir. But being totally unaware with the Sanskrit texts, they know very little of their duties, and hire other learned Brahmans for the purpose.

They are not very rigid in their caste rules, and have no objection to eat bread cooked in the house of Rajputs or other Hindus. They have a very low standing in the Brahmanhood, and the wearing of Jeneu or the sacred thread which forms an essential thing for a Brahman, is a question of their will. They are said to be the progeny of several degraded Brahman sub-castes, including also some Rajput element among them.

They generally follow Vishnuism. Their ceremonies of betrothal and marriage are nearly similar to those of Rajputs. Opium is partaken of on the occasion of betrothal, and the marriage ceremony comprises four pheras or perambulations round the sacred fire. The Sirimali Brahmans generally act as their priests, but among the Sewar Pirohits, the Pushkarna Brahmans discharge these functions. They burn their dead, but the shaving of the heads of heirs or other relatives is not considered compulsory. It is observed by well-to-do men only, who can afford to perform Mosar in which ceremony, the caste people are fed on the 12th day. The system of making adoption very rarely prevails among the Pirohits; the property being equally divided among the relatives, and on account of there being numerous shareholders, the villages held by them are found to be hardly prosperous.

They follow no other calling but cultivation, and possess land almost in all the parganas. Such grants are made to them by the Rajput nobility chiefly at the time of death, and they pay no rent for the land they hold. They do not beg, but receive without murmur what is given to them in charity. They till their own land, their females also working with them in the fields. Possession of land is considered a mark of honor among the Pirohits as among the Rajputs. Those who hold villages reckon themselves superior to those who possess land only. The former can marry the daughters of the latter without giving them any in return.

There are also some Natrayat Pirohits in the districts of Jalor and Godwar, who allow widow marriage or Nata, but they occupy a very inferior position, and cannot intermarry with the Pirohits of other districts. They have got their several sub-divisions, and separate Rajput clans have their own Pirohits. The chief of them may briefly be noticed here.

1—The Rajgurs are the Pirohits of the Punwars and claim [their origin from Agni-kund of Abu like the Punwar Rajputs. They say that their ancestor was produced from the kund uttering the words Ram Ram before the Punwar progenitor who came out saying Mar Mar. The Pirohit then addressed the Rajput thus—Tu Parmar hun Gur Raj ro, i. e. “thau art the destroyer of enemies while I am thine priest.” He was then acknowledged as a priest by the Punwar and being styled as Raj, was granted the village of Ajari as jagir, which now lies in Sirohi. The Rajgurs hold villages and land in Siwana and Pachbhadra districts. “They are,” says Mr. John Wilson “not confined to Rajputana, but are found wherever the Rajputs are scattered. They call themselves Brihat (Brishtá) or Broken Brahmans. By the regular Brahmanhood they are despised, but they have great influence wherever they are found, as family priests, astrologers, securities for life and property collectors of debts and substitutes in moral responsibility (!) for the sins of their clients.”

Col. C. K. M. Walter thus speaks of them:—“These men are the Pirohits of the Thakurs of Mallani; their duty is to escort the ashes of their deceased masters to the Ganges. At weddings they receive from all classes of Hindus what is locally known as lik i. e. presents in money; they hold land rent free from Thakurs.”

They have got their several sub-divisions, the chief of which are:—

(1) Abetá, (2) Kurlia, (3) Haráo, (4) Piplia, (5) Mundar, (6) Sindhap, (7) Pidia, (8) Ojah, (9) Boraluchha, (10) Silora, (11) Badmera, (12) Nagdra..

The Sindhap Pirohits were formerly the priests of Chohan Rajputs, but they do not now attend upon them, and are the Pirohits of other Rajputs. They enjoy Sasan chiefly in Pachbhadra, Sheo and Sanchores districts.

2—The Udecha Pirohits are the priests of Deora Rajputs and trace their lineage to Udali Rishi. They hold Sasan villages in the district of Godwar, and are divided into following clans:—

(1) Phandur, (2) Lakha, (3) Dhumdhumla, (4) Digari, (5) Davial, (6) Kesiria, (7) Hulya, (8) Borah (9) Sakwana, (10) Tirvari, (11) Rawal, (12) Sepáo, (13) Netrur, (14) Luchhiwal, (15) Pánécha, (16) Rudwa, (17) Titopa, (18) Bavaria.

3—The Jagurwal Pirohits trace their descent from Bál Rishi, and are the Pirohits of Sindhal Rathors whom they are said to have accompanied from Sheo to Jaitaran. They mostly hold villages in Jalor, Godwar, and Jaitaran parganas. They have not any sub-clan or caste.

4—The Panchlor Pirohits also claim their origin from the Agni-kund of Abu tracing their lineage to Parasur Rishi. They have no sub division, and hold Sasan in Siwana district.

5—The Siha Pirohits trace their pedigree to Gautam Rishi and declare that they came to Marwar from Pushkar. They hold two large villages in Godwar district, and have the following sub-divisions:—

(1) Siha, (2) Kevancha, (3) Hatla, (4) Rarbudda, (5) Bohtia.

6—The Palliwal Pirohits are the priests of Sisodia Rajputs. They belonged to Palliwal community of Brahmans, but after the destruction of Pali by Rao Siaji, they joined the Pirohits and intermarried with them. Their chief divisions are:—

(1) Gundocha, (2) Muhta, (3) Balbucha, (4) Gota, (5) Santhwa, (6) Nch-wana, (7) Agesuria, (8) Gomtiwal, (9) Pokarna, (10) Thanak, (11) Charak, (12) Balecha, (13) Mor, (14) Bhagora, (15) Nancwal, (16) Karmana, (17) Dhamania.

The first three divisions hold a good many flourishing villages in the Godwar district that were granted to them by Rana Mokal of Meywar to whose territory the district then belonged. The story current in Marwar shows that the Rana, while returning from Sirohi after his marriage, passed through the district of Godwar which abounded in villages, rich with green fields and presenting a delightful scenery. The new Rani took a fancy to them, and as the camp proceeded on, she at once felt the contrast, casting as may be said “a longing lingering look behind.” The Rana with a view to please his bride asked her if she desired to take the villages home. The Rani insisted upon the proposal of Mokal, who having sent for the Brahmans, granted the villages to them in charity, assuring the Rani that by this process, they both will enjoy the villages not only here, but in the next world too.

7—The Sewar Pirohits are the priests of Jodha and Sunda Rathores. They say that they were originally connected with the Gour-Brahmans, and that their ancestor by name Depal accompanied Rao Siaji from Kanauj to Marwar, where his descendants became associated with the Marwar Pirohits and intermarried with them. They occupy a superior position among other Pirohits, both as regards their number and their social standing, and hold Sasan villages almost in all the districts of Marwar, allotted to them in different reigns. The chief of them are the villages of Barli and Teori in the Jodhpore district, granted to one of their predecessors named Damaji by Rao Jodha, about more than 400 years ago. Damaji is considered to have been a man of good luck among his caste, being favoured with a grant of large and flourishing estates. He used to live, as the story goes, at Chitor with Rao Rir Mull, and when the latter was put to death by the Sisodia Rajputs, his son Rao Jodha and other followers fled from the place, with the exception of his uncle, Chundawat Bhim Singh, who was indulging at that crisis, in so sound a sleep that he could not be awakened, and was consequently left there alone to meet his fate. Damaji only stayed there with him. The day following Bhim was arrested and ordered to be murdered in cold blood. Damaji interceded for him and secured his release on a promise of paying three lakh of rupees as a ransom. But when the money was demanded, Damaji pleaded being a poor Brahman and thus got himself set free. He was awarded by Rao Jodha, for this valuable service, the village of Teori as Jagir, the proprietors of which are now known as the Teori Pirohits. Damaji's descendants have been very numerous, there being roughly declared to be one lakh Damani Pirohits scattered almost in all the states ruled by the Rathors. The extreme limit of the extent of their community towards the north is said to be the village, Neri in Bikanere, which also forms the limit for their marriage connexions. The village is considered to be so remote from the great concourse of the tribe, that not only matrimonial alliances are scarcely made beyond it, but the mere mention of its name forms a term of terror to young unmarried girls, as a proverb runs:—Gaie Neri so pachhi nahin aie Beri i.e. the girls married to the people of Neri are not expected to return to their father's home again. The name is often used as an expression of disapproval for disobedient and wicked daughters by their parents.

The Seward Pirohits have three sub-divisions:—Viz (1) the Akherajot (2) the Malawat and (3) the Kanawat. The Akherajot have eight Kotries at Teori in the Jodhpore district, the Malawats hold villages in Pali, Sojat and Jaitarn, and the Kanawats in the Nagore district.

8—The Sodha Pirohits take part in the ceremonies of the Mahecha and Dhavicha Rathors and hold Sasara in the district of Mallani, Siwana and Sheo. They declare themselves to be of the same origin as the Seward Pirohits.

9—The Dudha Pirohits declare themselves to have been originally the Sirimali Brahmans, but were excluded from the community for the fact that their ancestor Dudhaji was employed by Rana Mokal of Chitor in fetching a certain number of horses from foreign territories, which act was considered as very low. They do not hold any big village in Jagir, but enjoy Doli land in several parganas. Their sub-divisions are:—

(1) Kutba, (2) Bias (3) Sunkhwalia, (4) Raithala, (5) Lanpur, (6) Laphojar, (7) Ghania, (8) Podurwal, (9) Mayar, (10) Mahinwal, (11) Hadi, (12) Loharia, (13) Rudulia, (14) Rudwa, (15) Gundhura, (16) Mundvi, (17) Kadaria.

10—The Rai-Gur Pirohits are the priests of Sonugra Chohans, and enjoy Jagir in the districts of Pali, Jalor, and Godwar.

11—The Muana Pirohits were originally the Goyal Rajputs and (12) the Mewal Pirohits formerly belonged to the Funwars.

13—The Bhumwaria Pirohits claim their descent from the Ad-Gour Brahmans and were formerly the priests of Raolot Bhatias, but ceased to be so, when the latter migrated from Deravar. They hold land in Mallani and Jalor parganas.

THE DAKOT.

The Dákot Brahmans belong to the Punch-Gour group, and bear a proportion of 2·45 per cent to the total Brahman population of Marwar. They are also called Desantries in Marwar, and in the North-Western Provinces are known by the name of Bhadres, or Bhaddalis so called from following the tenets of Bhaddal, though Sir, H. M. Elliot describes them as a branch of the Dákot. In Benaras they are likewise spoken of by the term of Bhanriyas where as the Revd. Sherring remarks they are men of considerable influence and also discharge the functions of guides to the multitudes of pilgrims who visit the sacred city from all parts of India.

Mr. Denziel Ibbetson quotes the following tradition of their origin:—

“Raja Jasrath, father of Ram Chundar had excited the anger of Saturday by worshipping all other Grahs but him. Saturday accordingly rained fire on Jasrath's city of Ayudhia. Jasrath wished to propitiate him, but the Brahmans feared to take the offerings for dread of the consequences so Jasrath made from the dirt of his body one Daka Rishi who took the offerings and was the ancestor of Dákots by Sudra woman. The other Brahmans, however, disowned him; so Jasrath consoled him by promising that all Brahmans should in future consult his children.”

According to the story current in Marwar, which forms the supplement to the above tradition, the Dákots are said to be the descendants of a Brahman girl named Sawatri and afterwards styled as Bhadli, who became the wife of Daka Rishi, above alluded to. Sawatri was famous for her power in prophecy, especially regarding the rain-fall, and was the daughter of one Dehunter Bed, the family priest of Raja Parichhat, and a great astrologer and soothsayer of his time. The priest died of snake bite, but with a view to make the gift of prophecy hereditary among his posterity, he had taken precaution by advising his sons to eat up his dead body, instead of burning it. The father's injunctions were being duly acted upon, when Bhagwan appeared there in disguise of a Brahman, and reprimanding the sons for the heinous act they, as Brahmans, were going to commit, requested them to throw away the flesh cooked. The sons obeyed the command in spite of the remonstrances of their sister, Sawatri, whom they expelled from the house in accordance with the advice of the Brahman in-cognito. Sawatri thus met Daka Rishi in the Jungle and became his partner by fulfilling a prophecy about rain-fall which held off at that time for a considerable period. The flesh of Dehunter Bed which was thrown away was eaten by kites, partridges &c., for which reason they are regarded as the birds of omens.

The Dákots include several tribes of Brahmans among them which form their chief sub-divisions. They are:—(1) Gour, (2) Chhilodia, (3) Mér, (4) Ráwal, (5) Goriwa, (6) Pabusia and (7) Goshi.

The Dákots are considered to be proficient in astrology. They worship Saturday, and receive presents of oil on this day in honor of the god. All the unlucky offerings, such as black things and dirty clothes made to Rahu and Ket, which no other Brahman would accept, are offered to them. They also receive offerings made on the occasion of grahins or eclipses such as worn-out clothes, satnaja or seven grains mixed, as well as the charity given in Tula-dan in which ceremony as Mr. Talboys Wheeler describes, great men are weighed and the good things in the opposite scale are given to the poor or to the Brahmans. They are described by Col. Walter in his Gazetteer of Mallani, as "an inferior class who more often beg than work. Whatever charity is given on a Saturday, is given to these men. If a Rajput, Brahman, Ját or other Hindu falls on an unlucky Saturday, the Desantries are presented with a black buffaloe, cow, goat or even a black blanket, and in return they worship the God (Saturn) in order to drive off the evil omen."

The ceremonies of betrothal and marriage are nearly the same among the Dákots as with other Brahmans. Nata or Karewa is allowed among them, in which case, the relations of the former husband on receiving a Nata fee not exceeding Rs. 70, have to sign a written agreement expressing their consent to the second marriage of the widow. The Dákot women do not wear ivory churas but lac one.

THE JOSHIS.

The Joshis bear a proportion of 1·29 per cent to the total Brahman population of Marwar. They belong to the Punch-Deravar group and are also known by the name of Sanchora Brahmans in Marwar. The fable current among them shows that they originally came from the Deccan and assembled for the first time in Bhinmal at some very remote period, when the marriage of Bhagwan with Lukhshimi was celebrated there, and afterwards settled at Sanchor from which place they took their name as the Sanchora Brahmans.

They were formerly divided into 18 Gotras, but only 7 are now found, and they are:—(1) Kavan, (2) Bashisht, (3) Bharadawaj, (4) Kasyap, (5) Katiayan (6) Sandlus, (7) Alambaz. Their chief clans found in Marwar are—(1) Joshi, (2) Bias, (3) Thakur, (4) Muhta, (5) Davo and (6) Rawal.

The Joshis are the followers of Vishnu and they also worship Balarikh (another name for the sun) for which there is only one temple at Badmer in Mallani; the idol being of wood.

The ceremonies of betrothal among the Joshis are performed by a present of seven betel nuts and one cocoanut to the bridegroom's father by the other party on the former's paying a visit to the bride's father. Betel nuts are extensively made use of among the Joshis, and from a month before the marriage, the bride and bridegroom are profusely decorated with flowers. Nata or Karewa is not allowed among them.

The Joshis do not eat bread from the hands of any other Brahmans except those of their own tribe. They are largely found in Mallani where they are called the Badmera Joshis and carry on trade in Ghi and Gond on a large scale. "These Joshis who are cultivators," says Col. Walter, "are dealt with on more favourable terms than other labouring classes, a fourth share only of the produce is taken from them, and they pay no import or export dues."

The females of Joshis unlike other Brahman women generally adorn their forehead with tiki's or small round glass ornaments, as the Purbia women do. The widows make use of a special red chin were the first people to express their dissatisfaction on the use of the greased cartridges during the sepoy mutiny. In Marwar, they were also for the first time recruited as sepoys in the Durbar forces, during the time of Maharaja Bijai Singh, and had secured the greatest confidence of the Durbar during the last three reigns, being entrusted with the charge of State Treasury, as well as the Zenana Deoli (female apartment).

THE SANADH BRAHMANS.

They are properly a sub-tribe of the great Kanoujia Brahmans, although they regard themselves as belonging to the Gour tribe. The tradition as given by the Revd. M. A. Sherring respecting their origin is "that on the return of Ram from Ceylon, he wished to celebrate his victory over Ravana, the king of that island, whom he had killed by the celebration of a Jag or great sacrifice. As Ravana, was a Brahman, Ram found it difficult to induce many of the members of this caste to take part in the solemnity. The Sarwaria Brahmans declined to do so, and consequently incurred his displeasure. But the Sanadhs were less particular and performed the important ceremony; and thence-forward became separated from other Brahmans and formed a distinct tribe."

"Another account is that after the ceremony of the horse sacrifice, Ram wished to make grants of lands to Brahmans, which were declined by the Kanyakubjia Brahmans, yet in as much as religious offerings could only be made to Brahmans, and in order not to defeat the purpose of Ram, a man was chosen from each family, to whom a village was presented. Thus seven hundred and fifty villages in the province of Mathura were given to the same number of Brahmans, each of whom assumed the name of his village as the designation of his clan."

They are said to have come to Marwar from Kanouj with Rao Siaji, from which period up to the time of the late Maharaja Man Singh, they continued to hold charge of the state kitchen. They have 750 sub-divisions of which 51 are regarded as of more influence than the rest, but the chief of them found in Marwar are:—(1) Karotia, (2) Munjwár, (3) Chatréla, (4) Chupla, (5) Gunjela, (6) Goja, (7) Mota.

They follow Vishnuism, and are mostly employed in private service. The ceremonies of betrothal among them are chiefly performed by the females. It is customary for the bride's mother to make a present of some cocoanuts to the mother of the bridegroom, who then distributes Gur or Jagree among the caste members. The parents of the bride often receive a sum of Rs. 50 from the other party on the occasion of betrothal.

THE PALLIWAL BRAHMANS.

They belong to the Gour tribe, and take their name from the town of Pali which they held in grant from the princes of Mundore before the establishment of Rathor power in Marwar. "It was in Sambat 1212 (A. D. 1156) says Col. Tod, that Siaji, the founder of the Rathor dynasty and son to the Emperor of Kanouj, passed Pali on his return from a pilgrimage from Dwarka to the Ganges. The Brahmans sent a deputation to relieve them from two great enemies to their repose, namely the Minas of the Arayalli, and the lions which had become very numerous. Siaji relieved them from both, but the opportunity to acquire land was too good to be lost, and on the festival of the Holi, he put the leading Brahmans to death and took possession of Pali."

The Palliwal Brahmans do not observe the festival of Rakhi or Saluno, and the reason alleged by them is that the Emperor, Ghor Shah sacked the town on that day, slaughtered a large number of cows and threw them in the tank. The Brahmans fought bravely, but the number of those murdered in the struggle was as great that the Jenzus or sacred threads of the victims are said to have exceeded nine maunds in weight and the ivory Churas of the Palliwal women, who immolated themselves on the occasion with the remains of their slaughtered husbands, weighed about 84 maunds. It is generally believed by them that among the survivors, those who left the town by the west gate took to the profession of cultivation, whereas those who passed through the east gate became bankers and merchants. In Marwar, they are chiefly cultivators, but outside of it, they form a respectable class of Sahukars, and are known by the name of Bohras in Northern India. In Meywar, they are called Nandwanas. The land they hold is called Manglik upon which they enjoy hereditary right. The system of their land tenure is thus described by Col. Walter in the Gazetteer of Mallani where they are the chief Zemindars on the banks of the Luni. "The cultivators pay hasil (revenue) in kind to the Jagirdars, who are the real owners of the soil and the Palliwals receive a Zemindari hag locally known as ghugri from the cultivators (except of their own caste). This hag or share is paid in kind and depends on the season. In good season he gets for every Kalsi (local measure containing about twelve maunds), thirteen or thirteen and a half pailis (another local measure of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ seers) or in other words about a sixth share of the produce. If the Palliwal neither cultivates himself nor can find husbandmen, he has to pay rent in cash to the Jagirdar for such land as is left uncultivated. There is no land measurement in Mallani: a field or Khet in the Ner or land near the Luni may be from 8 to 25 bigahs, and for these fields the Palliwals pay from Rs. 2 to Rs. 5 as rent."

The Palliwal Brahmans have several sub-divisions, the chief of which are:—(1) Jugia, (2) Jajia, (3) Punid, (4) Dhamut, (5) Bhayal, (6) Thuma, (7) Potnur, (8) Harjal, (9) Charak, (10) Sandh, (11) Kura, (12) Hardolia, &c.

For purpose of Niat or feast, the Palliwals of Marwar have three separate communities. The first comprises the Brahmans of 60 villages of Pali and Jodhpore pargana, the second includes 24 Kheras of Kornawati in Pachbhadra; and the third comprehends the 12 villages of Mallani and 12 of Siwana. But this distinction does not, in any way, effect their other caste rules and customs in which they all equally take part. A grand ceremony termed Vishnu-Jug is sometimes observed at an enormous cost by the richest class of Palliwal Brahmans, merely to secure fame among the biradri or caste members. A large kund or reservoir is made for the purpose of hom in which ghee is thrown by means of sluices. In Marwar, it was celebrated in Sambat 1937 at Tilwara by Ram Kishen Kirpa Ram in which all the Palliwal Brahmans were invited from different parts of Marwar, each being offered a rupee and a brass vessel or lota as a Dukshina.

"The Palliwal Brahmans," says Mr. John Wilson, "never marry out of their own tribe, and contrary to the law-books give a consideration for their brides. They worship among other things, the bridle of a horse on the Dasserah in memory of their former state when they were chiefly robbers conducting their excursions on horse-back." They usually take large sums of money on the occasion of their daughter's marriage especially in cases when the bridegroom is either youthful or is a widower. It is especially on this account, that the majority of Palliwal Brahmans have no wives. In their colloquialism, they call their sons as Dupika i. e. those who drown them or in other words bring ruin upon them, whereas the daughters are styled as Tarka, meaning those causing to swim or preventing from being ruined.

THE SAYADS.

The Sayads are the priests of the Mohamedans as the Brahmans are of the Hindus. In Marwar they number only 3,760 (Males 2,016, females 1,744). They trace their descent from their mother's side to Mahomet, and from their father's side to Ali Murtaza, who were cousins and belonged to the Qureshia tribe of Arabian nobility. The true Sayads, as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, are only those descended by Fatma Mahomet's daughter, who was married to Ali, whereas those descended from Ali by other wives, though having no claim to the title are called Ulvi Sayads. There are also other divisions among them, named chiefly after their ancestors or the places the latter came from, such as Hashimi, Kazimi, Tabbai, Razvi &c.

They usually take the word Sayad before their name, and in some places the title of Shah. In the Punjab and other western provinces, as remarked by Mr. John Beams, "the respectful form of address Shah-Sahab is used to all Sayads of rank and Shahji to others." He further adds. "The large populations in all parts of the North-Western Provinces who were originally Hindus, but are now Musalman take great liberties with these titles; many affect the title Khan and some go so far as to call themselves Sayad especially if they have attained high social position. In the Punjab, where the process of conversion has been carried out on a very large scale, there used to be a proverbial couplet to this effect supposed to be spoken by a convert. "Last year I was a weaver, this year I am a Shekh. Next year, if grain is dear, I shall be a Sayad," meaning that if he sold his crops well he should be wealthy enough to assume this latter title.

The Sayads are Sunnis and also Shias. In Marwar the former only abound. The chief points of distinction between the two sects, are so fully described by Mr. Ibbetson that the following extract from him will not be out of place here. "The Sunnis are those who follow the Sunnat or customs and traditions of the faith, but the other sects also are bound by the traditions differing only on the question of what tradition should be accepted. The Sunnis are divided into four schools, the Hanifi, the Shāfi, the Maliki, and the Hambali. The differences are chiefly technical. The Shiah or Imamia school declares that the Musalman religion consists in the knowledge of the true Imam, a point which the Sunnis consider as unimportant and consist of the followers of Ali, the husband of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet, and the fourth Caliph. They maintain that on the death of the prophet, the office of Imam vested by divine right in Ali, and after him in his two sons Hasan and Husain. They necessarily reject as usurpers, the first three Imams, Abu Bakr, Umar and Usman whom the Sunnis accept, and detest the memory of the Unumeyid Caliphs who wrested the Caliphate from its rightful holder, and in particular that of Yazid who slew the martyr Husain. They observe the first ten days of the month of Moharram as a fast in commemoration of the martyrdom of Ali and his two sons and carry about tazials meant to represent the tombs of latter with loud lamentations and mourning. The Sunnis observe only the tenth day of the Moharram and abhor the taziahs. In the Punjab or at least in its western parts, Shiahs are commonly known as Rafizis, a name derived from rifz or abuse because they curse the first three Imams and their supporters, or meaning deserters because a section of the Shias is said once to have deserted the standard of Zaid the grandson of Husain because he refused to curse the first two Imams."

The Sayads are said to have come to Marwar during the period of the Mughal supremacy in India when they were mostly taken into Darbar service. Betrothals are contracted among them before marriage as among the Hindus. Widow marriage though allowed among the Musalmans, is generally not observed by the higher class Sayads of Marwar. The lower class people often contract Nata. Their females are generally kept in seclusion and they are not literate, though they surpass the Brahman women of the country in needle work. Among the high families, the widows who are allowed to be married, or those who are divorced, observe the parda system and do not appear in the presence of their late husband's relations.

THE JATIS.

The Jatis are the Jain priests, and number 834 in Marwar. The word is said to be a corruption of Jit-indri meaning those who control their passions. They are the spiritual guru of the Jaiuis, but on occasions of marriage, the priestly functions are discharged by the Brahmans. Their chief profession is preaching, and they teach celibacy and reverence for animal life. One of their greatest acts has been the conversion to Jainism of all the inhabitants, including also a large number of Rajputs, of village Osian in Marwar, from which place the Oswals take their name. They reject clothing and keep their head and feet naked. They always carry a bag of cloth with them to receive alms from the Jaiuis, who supply them their daily food. They are divided into 84 sects called Guchh, each having its separate leader or guru, and the chief of these are:—

Name of Guchh or sect.			Date of foundation.
(1)—Bhansolia	Samvat year 1080.
(2)—Rudrpalia	" 1215.
(3)—Mahoakharakhartara	" 1255.
(4)—Tapamat	" 1285.
(5)—Lahudakhartara	" 1381.
(6)—Pipalia	" 1415.
(7)—Begra	" 1422.
(8)—Lanka	" 1532.
(9)—Acharjia	" 1564.
(10)—Bhavrikhia	" 1616.
(11)—Bhagarsuria	" 1687.
(12)—Rungvijia	" 1700.

The chief object of worship among the Jatis are the 24 saints called Tirthunkar. They are the following.

(1) Rikhabnath ...	(9) Subudinath ...	(17) Kunthnath ...
(2) Ajitnath ...	(10) Sitalnath ...	(18) Arhnath ...
(3) Shimbhunath ...	(11) Sri-Huns ...	(19) Malinath ...
(4) Abhinundan ...	(12) Vaspuj ...	(20) Munisubratnath
(5) Somatnath ...	(13) Bimalnath ...	(21) Naminath ...
(6) Padampirbhé ...	(14) Anautnath ...	(22) Arathneminath
(7) Suparasnath ...	(15) Dharamnath ...	(23) Parasnath ...
(8) Chundrapirbhé	(16) Santinath ...	(24) Mahavir ...

But the most important among them, are the Rikhabnath, the Parasnath, and the Mahavir. Many of the Jatis also pay reverence to the Hindu gods and worship Bheron, Bhawani, and Hanuman. Most of their festivals generally occur in the month of Bhadon, during which period they keep fast and devote their time in reading religious books in the temples. They also observe the Diwali festival, on which day their beatified saint named Mahavir is said to have obtained liberation from earthly life. Palitana in Gujrat is the chief place of their pilgrimage, where there is a temple dedicated to Sindhgiri, and where a large fair is annually held. Another big fair held in Marwar is that called Rewari which takes place in the month of Katik, and the idol of Thakurji is carried about in all the villages inhabited by the Jainis. Other fairs are also held in Phalodi and at the village Barkana in Godwar.

Most of the Jatis act as physicians under which capacity they are known by the name of Guran. They also practise hocus pocus, or sleight of hand and as such, are supposed to be skilful magicians. It is generally believed that the Jain temples at village Narlai in the Godwar District were removed there by the Jatis through some magic power from the village of Kher in Mallani where also stands a very ancient temple of the same structure and style. The Jatis are well versed in Sanskrit and possess good many scriptures of their faith dealing with learned controversies against Hinduism which has always borne a considerable animosity with the tenets of their creed, as a saying runs—"it is better to jump into a well than to pass a Jain ascetic on the road;" also "A Hindu had better be overtaken by a wild elephant than take refuge in a Jain temple, and he may not run through the shadow of it even to escape a tiger." The Jatis do not marry. They make disciples or chelas from every high caste; the first chela generally succeeding his guru. No funeral ceremonies are observed among them on occasions of death. When a Jati dies, the body is burnt by the Jainis.

Among the Jatis, those who keep wives and live as Gharbaris or house-holders are called Mahatama, but they form a separate class and occupy a lower position. They also act as the Gurus of Rajputs and Oswals and preserve their genealogies as the Bhats do, for which they are paid. Brahmans take part in their marriage ceremonies, and they can make adoptions, but widows are not allowed to marry.

THE DEVOTEES.

The group of Devotees like the Priestly group consists of three religious sects, viz. the Hindus, the Jains, and the Mohamedans. Their total population in Marwar, according to the present census is 128,105 (Males 66,101 Females 62,004) and they form the third most numerous group under the Professional class B, being outnumbered by the Priests and the Writers only.

Originally there were no such orders of which Hinduism boasts, and the lives of whose founders are so full of miracles and wonders. According to the Hindu school of Philosophy, the fourth stage of a Brahman's life required him to withdraw from earthly affairs and live as an ascetic or religious mendicant. The various religious orders now known under different names, appearing in costumes of variagated colours, and having their own doctrines and tenets to follow, date their succession from a period about 700 years after Christ. They are called the Khat-darshan, and indicate several orders as included in the following Doha—

"Jogi, Jungam, Sewra, Sanyasi, Durvesh."

"Chhata rup jo Brahm ka ta men min na mekh."

But the different significations of the terms, Bairagis, Sadhus, Jogis, and Sanyasis, and their various sub-divisions, make the subject, as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, "one of the greatest complexity," impossible to dwell upon. The memo given below will, however, show the figures for some of the important sects of devotees as returned in the Census Tables of Marwar:—

				Males.	Females.	Total.
Bairagis. ...	}	Bishan-Shamis ...	Hindu.	5,475	5,159	10,634
		Sadhus ...	„	26,568	25,471	52,039
		Dadu-Panthis ...	„	2,130	2,008	4,138
Total ...				34,173	32,638	66,811
Jogis	„	16,427	13,786	30,213
Sanyasis including Dasnami Gosains			„	10,707	9,549	20,256
Samegi, Dhundia &c.		...	Jain	725	1,589	2,314
Fakirs	Mohamedan	4,069	4,442	8,511

THE BAIRAGIS.

The Bairagis are the worshippers of Vishnu. They wear garlands of beads called tulsi and mark their foreheads with distinctive tilak of powdered sandal-wood. They have special regard for animal life, and abstain from the use of liquor and meat. Like the Sanyasis, some among them practise celibacy, but others live as family men or Gharbaris. The latter generally wear clothes of white colour, work as pujaris in temples, and also employ themselves in private service. The celibates are generally called Khaki. They besmear their bodies with ashes, and roam about the country. They worship Narsinghji; some wear arms, and others also wear Jatas or long hairs. They were formerly said to have had many quarrels with the Sanyasis at the Hardawar and other Kumbh fairs, but those feuds are now removed by the interference of the British Government.

The Bairagis who chiefly worship Krishna are divided into four Sampradyas or sects founded respectively by (1) Ramanuj (2) Nimarak, (3) Madho Acharia, and (4) the Vishnu Swami. Each Sampradya has several gud lis or local brotherhood under the control of a separate head abbot called Mahant, Acharaj or Siriji, who is generally a Brahman and does not marry. He observes great sanctity, worships the idol of Vishnu and devotes his time in meditation.

The Bishen-Shamis are the followers of Vishnu Sampradya, and they are said to have come to Marwar in about Samvat year 1836, during the time of Maharaja Bij Singh. They have several Gotras and are divided into two sub-divisions—the Loha-giris and the Birj-basis. They form matrimonial alliances with the Ramavat, and Nimavat Sadhus and do not marry among themselves. Nata or Karewa is not allowed. Also no adoption is made, and in the absence of a male issue, disciples inherit the property. They do not smoke neither do they eat meat, onion or garlic. They burn their dead bodies. A few among them wear arms and are employed in Raj service as sepoy's.

The Balabhi Acharias form a branch of the Vishnu Sampradya. Their heads or Mahants, are called Gosains, and they marry and live as Gharbaris. Their sons succeed them to the gadi and they rarely adopt chelas. The chief among them widely known are the Gokalya Gosains. They worship Bal-Krishna styled by Col. Tod, as the "Juvenile Kaniya" and "depicted as an infant with a pera or confit ball in his hand." So deeply do they feel attached to the object of their veneration that they are said to keep the floor of their houses at an equal level, lest their youthful Krishna may have a fall while walking. They also do not speak loudly to avoid interruption in the sound sleep which their "blessed child" enjoys, and whom they adore many a times in a day. There are several temples at Jodhpore dedicated to Krishna. The village of Chopasni about six miles from Jodhpore contains an image of Gordhan Nath, "the God of the mount" said to have been removed there from Gokal at the time when Aurangzeb had adopted his bigotted policy of destroying the Hindu shrines. The village is considered by the Gosains as sacred a place of pilgrimage as the Nathdwara in Meywar. They mostly follow the manners and customs of the Pundaravar Brahmans. They marry and live as Gharbaris or family men, observing the parda system very strictly. They generally give their daughters in marriage to the Bhuts, a sub-division of the Dakhni Brahmans. They do not permit their daughters to go to their father-in-law's house, but on the contrary they keep their sons-in-law with them and bring them up as their sons. They have got a large number of followers in Marwar. They were much respected by Maharaja Bije Singh, who awarded them high distinctions, which they still continue to enjoy.

THE SADHS.

The Sadhs or Sadhus form a large class of the Bairagis, though their ordinances are not so strict and rigid as those of Bairag. They regard Ramanand as their founder and head, who was a Vishnu worshipper, and a follower of Ramanuj Sampradya. He came to Benares on pilgrimage from Southern-India, and adopted Chelas from every caste; his principle being—meaning that every one, who prays to the Almighty is sure to receive his favor, there being no distinction of caste.

“Jat pat puchhe nahin koe—Har ko bhajé so Har ka hoe.”

The sect prospered rapidly, and a large number of disciples was recruited from every class. They are mostly celibate, and the place where they assemble together is generally called Akhara. Many among them also live as Gharbaris. They marry and work as Pujaris in temples.

In Marwar the Jats generally form a large proportion of the Sadhus. They join the sect merely to lead an idle existence or to be exempt from all their liabilities rather than devote themselves to a religious life, as a saying runs.

“Matko mundayan tin gun—gac mathe ri bhaj.”

“Matko Chhero Chowdrian—Hasal chhero Raj.”

i.e. there are three advantages in getting the head shaved. It removes the itching of the head, and makes one exempt from the payment of Mazbh or village funds, as also from the Darbar dues.

Various sects are said to have sprung up among the Sadhus each being distinguished by its distinctive mark or Tilak. They are named chiefly after their founders, and may be divided into three different heads. Among the Vishnavites, those who worship idols, may be mentioned as the Ramavat, the Kumbhavat Sadhs whereas those who renounce idol worship, are known by the name of Ramsanchis, the Niranjani Sadhus &c. The third group consists of several Punths who neither worship Vishnu nor follow Shiva, but believe in the unity of God. They are the Kabir-panthis, the Dadu-panthis, and the Nanakshais.

These Sadhus generally live in monasteries called Ramdwara or Asthal, but they now usually consist of incorrigible rogues, engaging in all worldly pursuits and partaking of the richest dainties which a Hindu can offer. They hardly adhere to the doctrines of ascetism or observe any kind of devotion. Their character is best illustrated by the following couplets:—

“ Jo tu chahe dhan aur maya—Dadu-punthi hoja bhaya.”

“ Jo tu chahe indriyon ka bhog—Ja Kherape le le jog.”

“ Jo tu chahe bij binjani—Tau Gads ka hoja Niranjani.”

“ Jo tu chahe bhojan Khaya—Hoja Ramsanehi bhaya,”

They may be thus paraphrased—

Let any one, who desires to be a man of fortune, become a Dadu-punthi, and let him, who wants to enjoy the organs of his senses, make himself a Jogi of Kherapa. Any body desirous of carrying on business and trade, may with advantage join the Niranjani Sadhus, and he who is fond of delicious food, may better turn out a Ramsanehi.

THE RAMAVAT SADHUS.

The Ramavat Sadhus are the disciples of Ramanuj and worship Vishnu and Ram. “Their bodies,” says the Revd. M. A. Sherring “are marked with the sankh or shell, gadu or club, chakra or discus, and lotus flower, symbols of Vishnu. These marks are generally made at Dwarka; yet it is customary for a new disciple to receive them wherever he may be initiated for the sect admits no fresh member unless he has first been marked upon his body with the symbols.”

They belong to several Gurdwaras; the chief being at Dhuleria, Jhitra and Khod in Marwar. There is a temple at village Jhitra dedicated to Janrajji, and the Champavat Sirdars are the chief disciples of the sect. The Mertia Sirdars are the worshippers of Narsinghji, whose temple there is at Khod. The Ramavats admit disciples from every high caste. They marry and live as Gharbaris. They maintain themselves by serving as Pujaris in temples, and many also go about begging alms. Their Mahants or abbots are generally celibate. At death, their bodies are carried in a sitting posture and burnt.

In Marwar, there are also the Ramavats who deduce their origin from one Ramanand, a Pirohit of village Dhuleria in the Jodhpore pargana, who became a Sadhu during the time of Maharaja Abhe Singh.

THE KUMBHAVAT SADHUS.

They owe their foundation to Kumbhaji who was a potter by caste. He was noted for his fervour in religious devotion and his followers came to be called after him as the Kumbhavat Sadhus. They worship Krishna and Ram, and mark their forehead with the Ramanandi Tilak. They live as Gharbaris, and marry with the Ramavat and Nimavat Sadhus. Their bodies are burnt after death.

There are also other orders of devotees connected with the group of the Vishnuite idol worshippers, such as the Rankavats, the Nimavats &c. known after the names of their founders. They intermarry, and mostly follow the ceremonial rites already noted. They are distinguished only by special Tilak or mark on their forehead.

THE RAM-SANEHI SADHUS.

The word Ram-Sanehi literally signifies a lover of Ram and the followers of this sect generally go about uttering the words Ram Ram. There are two divisions among the Ram-Sanehis—(1) those belonging to the Gurdwara of Shahpura in Meywar, and (2) those connected with Kherapa of Marwar. The former are the followers of Ram Charan, who is said to have been born at Jeypore in about Samvat year 1776. He was a Mahajan by caste and he one day dreamed that he was floating in a river whence he was taken out by an old Sadhu. As soon as he awoke, he abandoned the world, and became a Sadhu. His disciples dispersed every where, and they adopted Chelas, from the Brahman, Mahajan, and Rajput castes; the first Chela generally succeeding his guru. They do not wear clothes, but use simply a Lungoti and a Chadar. They do not marry and live on begging alms. They live in Ramdwars and their dead bodies are burnt.

The Ram-Sanehis of Kherapa deduce their origin from the Ramavat Sadhus. They are said to be the followers of one Autanand Swami who was a disciple of Ramanand. Their chief Gurdwaras are at village Kherapa in Marwar, and at Sethal in Bikanere. They wear clothes and ornaments, some also carry on trade. They formerly adopted Chelas even from the Bhambi caste to which class their Mahants, Ramdass and Maldass belonged. But now they admit only high caste members. They also formerly used to marry, but their present Mahant is a celibate. Their bodies are burnt after death.

THE NIRANJANI SADHUS.

The Niranjani Sadhus profess the tenets of Hari Dass, who was a Jat of Nagor in Marwar. He is said to have once gone out on a hunting excursion, where he shot an arrow at a pregnant doe. He was so grieved to find the innocent creature and its young one wounded that he tore his clothes, went away in the jungle, and gave himself up to meditation for a period of twelve years. As he worshipped the Almighty in the form of Niranjani Nirakar, his followers came to be called as Niranjani Sadhus. He had 52 disciples who became founders of as many sects of the Niranjanis. Some among them live as celibate and are called Nihang. They generally keep a Khaki gudri or a pallet with them. But many do marry and those living in villages also contract Nata. Their women are distinguished by the Ghagra or petticoat of white chintz they generally wear. They do not eat meat, garlic and onion, nor do they drink water from the hands of a low-caste. They burn their dead bodies.

THE KABIR-PANTHIS.

The sect was founded some six hundred years ago, by Kabir a weaver by caste, but a most famous disciple of Ramanand. His teachings have wide renown being known as the Kabir-baunis. His life has been marvellous, and his death, a solemn mystery. On his decease, says the Hon. Dr. Hunter, "both the Hindus and Musalmans claimed the body, the former to burn it, the latter to bury it, according to their respective rites. While they wrangled over the corpse, Kabir suddenly stood in the midst, and commanding them to look under the shroud, vanished. This they did. But under the winding sheet they found only a heap of beautiful flowers, one half of which they gave to be burned by the Hindus in their holy city, while the other half was buried in pomp by the Musalmans. His name lives in the memory of his people; and to this day pilgrims from Upper India beg a spoonful of rice-water from the Kabir Monastery at Puri, at the extreme southern point of Bengal." The Kabir-panthis do not marry, and admit disciples from all castes. They wear reddish clothes and bury their dead bodies in a sitting posture. In Marwar, they date their origin from the time of Maharaja Bijay Singh.

THE DADU-PANTHIS.

The sect was founded by Dadu, who was a Nagar Brahman of Ahmedabad and was born in Samvat year 1601, though some declare him to be a cotton cleaner by caste. The Revd. M. A. Sherring calls him a disciple of Kabir, but the Dadu-Panthis deny it, he having flourished two hundred years later than Kabir. The local tradition says that while Dadu was once playing with his friends at the age of thirteen years, he met an old Fakir, believed to be the Bhagwan incognito, who spitting into his mouth, initiated him in the light of the true faith. He then came to Marwar and thence to village Naraina in Jeypore where he succeeded in establishing a guddi after a good deal of controversy with the Khangarots, a branch of the Kuchhwahas, who then held the place in Jagir. He subsequently came to the notice of the Emperor, Akbar, who is said to have called him at Delhi and put some questions for reply as embodied in the following couplet—

“ Akbar puchhe Phukkar ko tino bat ari.”

“ Ahrun, Hatora, Sandiasi pehle kon garhi.”

meaning which of the three things viz. the anvil, the hammer or the pincers was invented first, as each forms an essential thing to the other. Dadu is said to have replied in the following way—

“ Ek sabad men sab kiya aisa samrat soi.”

“ Age piche roh kare jo bal hina hai.”

i. e. all the things were made at one and the same time, and that one who has no power, has to make one thing after the other.

A miracle connected with the story is, that Akbar held a Darbar in which he also invited Dadu, for whom no seat was, however, provided. But to the utter amazement of all, Dadu appeared there sitting in a Singiasan or a throne. He is said to have died at Naraina in Samvat year 1660.

There are about 5,000 verses, said to be the teachings of Dadu, which are compiled in a book called Dadu-Bauni. He had 152 disciples, of whom 52 are said to have established as many guddis or thambas in different places. The Dadu-Panthis receive disciples from every high caste. A candidate is first required to have his lock of hair cut off and his head shaved. The sacred Muntra of Dadu is then whispered and he is thus taken into the fraternity. The followers of the sect believe only in one god, and do not worship other Hindu deities, nor do they make offerings to them. The tenets of their faith appear to have some resemblance to the doctrines of Islamism. They abstain from the use of liquor and meat, but can eat their food cooked in the house of every high caste Hindu. They generally wear a pointed cap and a flowing robe. At death, their bodies are burnt.

There are two sects among the Dadu-Panthis. Those who live as family men and do marry, are called Gharbaris, whereas those who practise life-long celibacy are known by the name of Nilang, of whom the Nagas are a sub-division. It was said that there are no Dadu-Panthi females, but the special enquiries made into the matter show that there are Gharbari Dadu-Panthis in Marwar, chiefly residing in the districts of Marot, Sambhar, Nawan and Parbatsar, who also have their marriage connexions at several places in the Jeypore territory. Brahmans take part in their marriage ceremonies. The Dadu-Panthis though apparently forming a most devoted sect, concern themselves with worldly affairs. They cultivate land, carry on trade and lend money, being always found very strict with their debtors. Among them, those who do not belong to any particular community are called Birkt. They wear reddish cloth and wander about begging alms from house to house. Some also besmear their bodies with ashes, and wear long hair or jatas.

The sect of Nagas was founded by Sundar Dass, a Rājput by caste, who came to Dadu, and was made a disciple by him while being armed. It is for this reason that his followers still keep themselves to the profession of arms. They form an important military class in Jeypore, but as a saying runs—Ramji ki murat lari lari, na lari, they are considered as being more fit to collect spoil rather than fight a battle firmly. They do not marry at all, and are distinguished by their langoti or scanty dhoti they wear and hence called Naga or naked, which also implies as one devoted to celibacy or in other words separated from all family connexions. They recruit their number by adopting chelas. They were once much feared as being very hard in their transactions, often taking young boys from their debtors in return of the money they advanced, whom they made their chelas, and brought them up to their profession.

THE NANAK-SHAI.

They form a class of devotees among the Sikhs, and are the disciples of Nanak-Shah. "The members of this religious order," says the Revd. M. A. Sherring "on becoming devotees do not marry; they wear the gerua-vastra or red cloth. They have no Nagas or naked ascetics, like the Udasis, and will partake of food in the houses of all Hindus. They do not worship idols, but the Granth or sacred book of Nanak."

THE JOGIS.

The Jogis are the followers of Gorukhnath whom they believe to be still living, and they worship Shiva.

"The term Jogi or Yogi, according" to Mr. Wilson, "is applicable to the followers of Yoga or Patanjala school of Philosophy which amongst other tenets maintained the practicability of acquiring even in life, entire command over elementary matter by means of certain ascetic practices." But the present signification of the word implies all those persons who only split their ears and wear Gerua-Vastra or red cloth, no matter whether they do or do not practise the suppression of breath or the mental abstraction as enjoined by the Yoga school. They belong to twelve panths, and generally have the termination of nath after their names. They eat flesh and drink spirits. They marry, and very few among them are celibate. They regard Nepal as their holy place. Their bodies, after death, are buried, their tombs being termed Samadhi.

They are divided into two divisions. The first consists of the Kanphata-Jogis or Naths, who pierce their ears and wear rings or Mundras. The second includes the Kalbelia Jogis who do not split their ears.

The Náths are a respectable order among the Kanphata-Jogis, and are also known by the names of Jogeshwar, Sarup or Aisji. They are the disciples of Jallundur Nath. It is essentially necessary for them to have their ears slit and to wear the cylindrical rings, but it forms an exception in the case of females. They are called Augar before the ceremony of piercing the ears is observed. They are Gharbaris and can marry with the Shamis. Nata or Karewa is also practised. They form a regular caste, including several clans of Rajputs, the Bhatís of Jeysulmere especially forming a high proportion.

They are generally considered as Gurus of several Rajput clans. "The Guru or priest of the famous Malinath" says Col. Walter, "from whom Malani is named was a Gosain called Garibnath, none of his disciples are allowed to marry, but if any of them is caught intriguing with a woman, he is turned out of the temple, and not allowed to re-enter it. He then may marry if he likes or take a woman into his house as a concubine." Maharaja Man Singh entertained a very high regard of the Náths who rose to an influential community during his time. The Aisji of Mahamandar still continues to enjoy special prerogatives.

The Masania Jogis, though forming a lower order, trace the same pedigree as that of the Náths, of Mahamandar. They were degraded from their position for receiving cloths thrown over dead bodies, and hence called the Masania Jogis. They cannot marry with the Náths. They are the followers of Chiryanath whose Samadh at village Palasui forms their chief Gurdwara in Marwar. They are found only in Jodhpore and they work as labourers or beg alms. They carry their dead bodies in a Jholi or wallet of cloth and bury them in a sitting posture. They can also admit disciples from other castes by having their ears split, which fact prevents the converts from ever rejoining their original caste, as a saying runs—

Rakh lagai ne dhode,

Aur kan pharai ne bode.

i. e. the Jogis who only besmear their bodies with ashes can wash it out, but those who get their ears pierced are gone from their original caste for ever.

The Kalbelia Jogis owe their origin to Kani-pao, the twelfth disciple of Jallundar Nath. They form a lower order of Jogi beggars, the Rawal Jogis also belong to this class. They have not their separate Mahant their chief Gurdwara being at village Digai in Marwar. They also go to Hinglaj on pilgrimage. They earn their livelihood by receiving offerings made at the local shrines. They are also snake charmers, and practise exorcism and divination. They eat food from the hands of Hindus as well as Musalmans, only the lowest castes such as the Bhangis, Sansis, Minas and Bhils are excepted. They are divided into several clans, and intermarry, and also practise Nata. They generally keep with them Khuppars or earthen pots which they break when they fight with each other, as a proverb runs—Jogi Jogi laren khapparon ki han.

THE SANYASIS.

The Sanyasis are the followers of Sankara Acharya. "Really the word meant nothing more," as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, "than the ascetic stage through which every Brahman should properly pass." But it now forms a separate class, comprising several orders of the Saiva ascetics, and consists of three groups, viz. the Sanyasis, the Dandis, and the Shamis.

Properly the Sanyasis are those who abandon the secular world and undergo the most dreadful ordeals, some hanging themselves by trees with their heads downward, others keeping one of their hands erect for an unlimited period, and many using thorns as their bed or taking their seat in the sun during the scorching heat of the summer.

The Dandis are those who always carry a staff in the hand, and hence called Dandi from Danda a stick. They are thus described by the Revd. M. A. Sherring. "The Dandis do not touch fire, or metal, or vessels made of any sort of metal. It is impossible, therefore, for them to cook their own food like other Hindus. It is equally impossible also for them to handle money. They wear one long unsewn reddish cloth, thrown about the person. Although they are on principle penniless, yet they do not beg. Their dependence on the kindness and care of others is thus of the most absolute characters. Yet they are not reduced to want, or even to distress: they are fed by the Brahmans and the Gosains, another class of devotees but of lax principles, and not restricted to any one caste. The Dandis do not marry and have no houses of their own. They have literally nothing they can call their own, except a diminutive mat to lie upon, a small pillow, the cloth they wear, a stick, and a Kamandal or hermit's pot for holding water. The stick they use at the age of fifty, previously to which they are only disciples, and are not called Dandis."

The Shamis are also known by the names of Gosains and Atits and are thus described by Col. Walter. "These men eat flesh and drink spirits, Their bodies are buried not burnt after death. They are worshippers of Mahadeo. There are different classes of Gosains some are buried in a sitting position and some at full length. Their remains are interred in the place where they lived, a platform of mud or stone, according to the status of the deceased, is placed over the remains, and a figure of Mahadeo. In parts of Marwar this class own villages, and are well off some of them (those who marry) cultivate, but the greater number are beggars, that is, they live on charity. They are generally divided into ten divisions called the Dasnamis, which are (1) Giri, (2) Puri, (3) Bharti, (4) Ban, (5) Aran, (6) Parit, (7) Sagar, (8) Tirth, (9) Asram, and (10) Sarswati. They are the followers of Shiva, and also worship Devi. They are, for the most part Gharbaris and intermarry among themselves. They can also marry in their own subdivision, the only distinction observed, being that of a Gurdwara to which they belong, and which forms their separate Khamp. Brahmans take part in their marriage ceremonies. They eat flesh and their bodies are buried after death.

Among the Gharbaries, those who wear arms, are called Mahapurash. They were mostly employed in the Raj service as sepoy's, but their number is now being reduced.

Chelas from high castes are also admitted. They get their heads shaved, and are given a Khuppur to receive alms. The sacred Muntra is then whispered to them, and they, thus, become a Shami. They enjoy equal rights as the sons, (whether real or illegitimate,) and can form, marriage connexions with the same family in which the latter marry. In some cases, however, preference is given to the Chelas. The sons or the carnal children are called Bindka, and the Chelas or the spiritual children are known as Nadka.

The females of the Shamis are styled as the Shamans and they wear the ordinary dress of a woman. Those, however, who visit Hinglaj, or do not live as Gharbaris, generally go under the guise of a male, using the Dhoti instead of the Ghagra and wearing an Angarkha and turban in place of a Lugri. They are then known by the name of Abdhutans.

Many among the Shamis do not marry, and live as Nihang or Abdhuts. They besmear their bodies with ashes, and generally keep with them the skin of a tiger or of a reindeer; also a Kamandal, and a tongs. They have long hair, and depend upon the Gharbaris for their food. The Mahants of the Shamis are also celibate. Each division has its separate Mahant and above all there is an head-abbot who is called the Dasnami Mahant.

THE SAMEGIS.

The Samegis form an order of Jain ascetics. They are said to have sprung up from several sects of the Jatis, and owe their origin to one Anand Bimal Suri, who flourished at Ahmedabad in about the sixteenth century, and founded a separate sect under the name of Samegis. They are distinguished by the yellow clothes they wear, and roam about from place to place. They do not stay at any particular locality for more than 27 days. They follow the same tenets and also observe the same festivals as the Jatis do, but they do not worship idols. They do not hang a cloth before their mouth like the Dhundias, but generally keep a piece of cloth in their hand and use it when they have to speak. They do not marry, but include a large proportion of females in their sect who also wear yellow clothes. Both the males and females keep a stick or danda in their hand. Brahmans do not take part in any of their ceremonies, and they admit disciples from every caste. They live by begging alms, and also receive in charity the yellow cloth they wear, provided it is worth under eleven rupees, but they refuse it if it exceeds the amount. Their bodies are burnt after death, and they are washed before being taken to funeral piles.

THE DHUNDIAS.

The Dhundias form a most devoted sect among the Jains, and are said to have sprung up from the Lunka Guehh of the Jatis in about Samvat year 1545. They are called Dhundias "because their followers," as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, were persecuted by the orthodox and compelled to take refuge in ruins or Dhund. There are two sects among them viz. (1) the Bais-panthis and (2) the Tera-panthis, so called from the number of their followers being 22 and 13 that founded the sects respectively. The Tera-panthi sect is said to have been branched out from the Bais-panthi in about Samvat 1831.

The Bais-panthis admit disciples from every high caste, but the Tera-panthis receive only those with whom they can eat together. The admission of disciples is considered a very big affair and is observed with grand ceremonies. Every candidate whether male or female, has first to obtain the consent of his parents or relations, and from a week before his conversion, he is given rich clothes to put on, and is taken in a palanquin with all pomp, to some orchard or a temple outside the city, where he is kept very comfortably, indulging in varieties of delicious food and enjoying the smell of sweet flowers and other perfumes. On the day fixed, he is shaved and wears the dress of a Fakir. The guru or the spiritual guide then pulls out the hair from off his head, whispers the sacred muntra, and teaches him the abandonment of the secular world. The hair thus pulled out is collected with great enthusiasm by the persons present, and is generally worn as amulets in the right wrist by the women who entertain a longing desire for an issue. Sweetmeats and cocoanuts are then distributed to the relatives and friends present there. It is customary with the novitiate to pass a night at the same place where he is initiated. On the day following, he goes out and does not return to the place he thus leaves for a period of six months.

The Dhundias always drink boiled water, and do not eat fresh fruits or vegetables. They generally hang a cloth or patti before their mouth preventing insects from entering it. They also carry with them a kind of brush made of peacock's feather with which they sweep the ground before sitting, down. "They carry their regard" says Mr. Ibbetson, "for animal life to extremes, teaching that no living being should be interfered with, that a cat should be permitted to catch a mouse or a snake to enter the cradle of a child."

They live by begging alms and refuse to accept every thing which they find as purchased solely with a view to be given to them. They mingle together all the different eatables they receive in charity before they eat, and bury the leavings under the ground instead of giving them to any body else. They neither shave, nor do they bathe; they walk bare-foot, and wear a white cloth not exceeding rupees nine in cost, which they never wash, but tear it up in pieces when it becomes dirty or old. They never go out in the night, nor do they burn lights. They also do not use any conveyance and are even rarely found travelling by Railways. They stay at one place during the rainy season, and keep fast for several days together in the month of Bhadwa, which festival is called Pajusan.

Their dead bodies are carried by the Jainis also called Saraogis in a Bekunti, and burnt. No other funeral ceremonies are performed after death.

FAKIRS.

The figures for Fakirs in Marwar include four different classes of Musalman beggars, namely the Madari, the Kalandar, the Jalali and the Benawa. They all belong to the Sunni sect.

The Madaris owe their origin to Badi-ud-din Shah of Makanpore called also Zindah Shah Madar. Mr. Ibbetson thus writes about him. "He was a converted Jew, who was born at Aleppo in A. D. 1050, and is said to have died at Makanpore at the mature age of 383 years after expelling a demon called Makan Deo from the place. He is supposed by some to be still living, (whence his name) Mahomet having given him the power of living without breath. His devotees are said never to be scorched by fire, and to be secure against venomous snakes and scorpions, the bites of which they have power to cure. Women who enter his shrine are said to be seized by violent pain as though they were being burnt alive."

They earn their livelihood by begging alms, but sometime they prove to be a pest to society by wounding their bodies by means of Gurz or mace they usually keep with them if the persons addressed refuse them money. Some among them erect wooden swings locally called Dolar-Hindus when a fair is held, a few cultivate land, and many employ themselves in private service or in Muzduri. They generally repeat the words Fazl-i-Mola, Yad-i-Mola, at the time of saluting each other instead of the usual form of address used by ordinary Musalmans. They are also called Malang, though Mr. Ibbetson makes the latter a branch of the Madaris.

The Kalandars declare themselves to be the couriers of Imam Husen during the Karbala wars, and up to this time, it is customary with them to wear green clothes, and run bare-foot as Paiks or sham messengers with a drawn sword in hand from one Taziah to another for three days from the 7th to the 10th of the month of Mohurram. Their name also indicates that they might be the followers of Bu Ali Kalandar. They have wives and children, and live by begging alms.

The Benawa trace their connection with Khawaja Hasan Basri. They are distinguished by a long cap they wear, and are also known by the name of Azad. They are a great buffoons, and beg alms.

The Jalalis are the followers of Sayad Jalal-ud-din of Bukhara. "Candidates for admission to the order," says Mr. Ibbetson, "shave completely, burn their clothes, and are branded on the right shoulder."

There are also other orders among the Musalmans, as for instance, the Kadiris, the Chistis, and the Naqshbandias, who may properly be called as Fakirs or Durvesh, but as they have returned themselves with the Sayads and Shekhs, they are not included under this head. They are held in great respect by the people being regarded as their Pir, and they always keep a large retinue of followers with them.

The Kadiris, as says Mr. Ibbetson, sit for hours repeating the following declaration—"Thou art the guide, thou art the truth, there is none but thee."

"The Chishtis," says he, "worship by leaping up and jesticulating and repeating Allah-ya-Allah-hu till they work themselves into a frenzy and at last sink down exhausted."

The Naqshbandias are described by Mr. Ibbetson to be the followers of Khawaja PirMohammad Naqshband, and are said as worshipping by sitting perfectly silent and motionless with bowed head and eyes fixed on the ground." In Marwar, they generally beg flour during the day time, and at night, they go with a lighted lamp in hand begging Kouries or shells from shop to shop. They generally speak the Marwari language, but their females use words of Sindhi dialect.

TEMPLE SERVANTS.

The temple servants or the Pujaris in Marwar number 23,074 (males 11,763 females 11,309). They form a separate caste and worship the sun. They are called Saivags from the word Saiva or worship they do in the temple. They are also known by the name of Bhojaks which seems to be connected as Col. Jenkins of Kangra remarks, with the Sanskrit word bhoj to feed. In Jeypore they are styled as Bias.

They declare themselves to be originally Brahmans being composed of the six Gotras of Gujar-Gour, six of Khundelwals and four of the Pushkarnas. According to local tradition they are said to be the descendants of Makjati Rishi who was married to a Bhoj-buns daughter and hence called Bhojaks. Makjati was employed by Sambh, the son of Krishna as a Pujari in a temple he dedicated to Surj or the sun with a hope of getting recovery from leprosy he was then attacked with, as a punishment for his misconduct. From that time forward the Bhojaks are chiefly employed as temple servants. They mostly follow the ceremonies of Mahajans in their marriages and betrothals, their funeral rites chiefly corresponding with those of the Brahmans. They wear the sacred thread, but are not recognized as Brahmans being employed for the most part as priests in the Jain temples and also for the fact that they can eat their food from the hands of Oswals. Col. Walter mentions them as a low-caste of Bhahmans. "They live chiefly, says he, on charity and are the Pirohits of Oswal Mahajans; they cook for the Oswals and read kitabts. Although themselves Snivas, they worship at the Jain temples."

In the Panjab, they are described by Mr. Ibbetson to be a "mixed collection of Nais, Brahmans, Rajputs, Jogis who intermarry among themselves alone, eat flesh, drink wine and are a debauched and profligate set; the men are constantly in the courts involved in litigation and the women are notorious for their loose morality."

GENEALOGISTS!

The group of genealogists comprises six different castes, four of which aggregating 45,148 are Hindus, and the remaining two numbering 3,148 are Musalmans. The proportion they all together bear to the total population of Marwar comes up to 1.91 per cent. The following abstract will show the figures for each caste as returned in the present census:—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Charans	... Hindus.	11,502	9,924	21,426
Bhats...	... do.	12,604	9,955	22,559
Motisara	... do.	451	379	830
Rawal	... do.	172	161	333
Mirasi	... Musalman	1,365	1,613	2,978
Dom do.	108	62	170
Total		26,202	22,094	48,296

THE CHARANS.

The Charans next to Rajputs form a very interesting class of people in Rajputana though they are, as Sir John Malcolm remarks, little if at all known in Hindustan. "They are supposed, says Mr. John Wilson to get their name from the feeding and rearing of cattle." They claim a celestial origin and deem themselves among the Hindu deities, declaring the Himalaya range to be their original abode. Sir John Malcolm quotes the following fable of their origin—"Mahadeva first created Bhats to attend his lion and bull; but these could not prevent the former from killing the latter, which was a source of infinite vexation and trouble, as it compelled Mahadeva to create new ones. He therefore formed the Charan equally devout as the Bhat, but of bolder spirit, and gave him in charge those favourite animals. From that period no bull was ever destroyed by the lion."

"These classes," he further says, "rank as the genealogists of proud and ignorant chiefs; and favoured individuals often combine with that office the station of counsellors and establish an ascendancy over the minds of their superior which is stronger from being grounded upon a mysterious feeling of awe. It is to them that the proudest Rajput looks for solace in adversity, and for increased joy and exultation in prosperity."

They are said to have migrated from the Gangetic plains towards the Deccan with their Rajput chiefs, when the latter were over-whelmed by foreign inroads and when their internal dissensions, during the great Mahabharata war, compelled them to leave their original habitation. They are thus divided into two divisions, and named after the places of their subsequent settlement. Those who took their abode in Marwar, came to be called Maru Charans, whereas those who settled at Kutch were known by the name of Kachhela Charans.

They both do not intermarry, neither do they smoke or eat together. According to Sir John Malcolm, the Kachhelas do marry with the Rajputs, but it is hardly the case in Marwar. The Charans are the followers of the Shaktik religion, and they generally cultivate land. They usually follow the manners and customs of Rajputs, differing only in the laws of inheritance which are observed by equal partition of property. There are generally so many partners among them, that the expression charnia-bunt has become an household phrase denoting innumerable divisions of a share, and which fact constantly keeps them involved in litigation. In Marwar, their mutual dissensions were up to late, so great, that a separate court under the name of Khatdarshan existed for their settlement during the last two reigns.

The Charans have been noted for their perverseness, and though regarded as the most trustworthy persons, and acting at the same time as safeguards to travellers they have always been very extravagant in their demands which often resulted in the most evil consequences. They usually committed Chandi or self sacrifice by cutting and wounding their bodies with knives or swords, and practised Dharna or extortion by sitting for hours and days to enforce their payments.

The Maru Charans occupy a higher position being the chroniclers of the cherished fame of Rajput chiefs who have always entertained a very high regard for them, having given them especial distinctions in court. They receive gifts from the Rajputs at all feasts and marriages, and hold extensive lands and villages granted to them under Udak or rent free tenure. In Marwar they possess land yielding a revenue of about four lacs of rupees a year. With a view to please their liberal masters, they have always exaggerated such presents by thousands or millions, calling the ordinary gifts as lakh-pasao, arab-pasao or kiror-pasao. One Karni Charan had been very fortunate in Marwar to receive a liberal gift from Maharaja Abhe Singh. Some of the Charans had got access even into the courts of the great Mughal Emperors, where by the powerfull influence of their poetry and the fluency of their speech they succeeded in securing seats for themselves, on occasions of Darbars, which privilege even the great Rajas whom they accompanied could not enjoy.

Barhut is the title of respect for the Maru Charans, and they regard it abusive to be styled as Kulas. They do not practise Nata or Karewa, and the females observe the parda system. They are divided into numerous clans or khamps, who intermarry with each other. The chief of them are—

(1) Rohria, (2) Ratnu, (3) Soda, (4) Asia, (5) Misan, (6) Bansur, (7) Lalus, (8) Ada, (9) Sandayach, (10) Kavia, (11) Jagat, (12) Sunga, (13) Gunga, (14) Surtania, (15) Dadwaria, (16) Medu, (17) Debal, (18) Mingus, (19) Nandu, (20) Shandu &c.

The Rohria Charans are the pol-pats or mendicants of the Rathors. They were originally Bhatīs. Their ancestor named Chanda, who was a Bhatī Rajput, was made Charan by Raipal Rathor and married to a Charan woman. The present Barhut of Mundiar is a representative of this clan and enjoys distinction in court as a Tazimi-Sirdar. Col. Walter gives the following origin of the Bhatī-Barhuts—"A Bhatī of good family had an intrigue with a woman of good family, but of another caste; they came together and took up their abode on the left bank of the Luni near Durmara. The water on this bank of the Luni is brackish and undrinkable whilst that on the right is sweet and good. When the river was in flood (so runs the story) this couple, either singly or together were able under the auspices of a goddess to cross to the right bank without even getting their clothes wet, and from thence bring sweet water. On this way they were looked upon as holy people and the village of Durmara was given to them. They have now spread over other parts of India."

The Ratnu Charans trace their pedigree to Pushkarna Brahmans. Ratnu the son of Busdeo (a Pushkarna Brahman) was made a Barhut by Deo Raj Bhatī of Jeysalmere as described above (vide Pushkarnas page 64-)

The Soda Charans are the pol pats of the Ranas of Meywar, and are held in great respect there.

There is another class among the Marus called the Tirwari Charans. They are said to be descended from a Brahman woman of Tirwari caste with whom Darsaji an Ada-Charan had an intrigue. His descendants are found in Godwar and Jalor districts. They have a low position and cannot intermarry with the Marus. They are generally given Tiag at half the rate received by other Charans.

The Kachhela Charans are chiefly merchants. They carry on trade and graze their cattle. They pay no dues, and formerly used to avoid any forced payment by having recourse to their usual way of self-sacrifice. They are not so expert in chanting the praises of Rajput heroes as the Maru Charans are, but they are shrewd men of business. Their females do not observe parda. They allow Nata, but no payment is made on that account. One can even marry a widow of his brother.

The Kachhelas are also called Garvis. They are said to have come to Marwar from Kuchh, and settled for the first time at Sindari in Mallani. The place was named Shinadari, after their headman called Shina, and in former times, as says Col. Walter, it was considered "Surna or a place of refuge from which no criminal or others seeking an asylum could be given up."

The Kachhelas have also numerous clans, the chief of which are:—

(1) Balsi, (2) Dewád, (3) Salkan, (4) Chanpa, (5) Ed, (6) Nagi, (7) Karwa, (8) Bachha, (9) Bhojak, (10) Baduá, (11) Kharta, (12) Bati, (13) Medmal, (14) Bhati, (15) Tumbel, (16) Kolia.

There is a class of Bhambis connected with the Kachhelas and called Charnia Bhambi. A Charan is said to have touched a dead calf and thrown it away, which is generally the work of Bhambis. He was therefore excluded from the community, and his descendents came to be called Charnia Bhambis. Their females do not wear silver ornaments in the feet.

Females of the Charans are generally much respected. There are said to be nau lakh Lurial or nine lac females among the Charans who were gifted with miraculous powers. They are called Lurial from the fact that they generally wore Loe or woolen blankets. Among the Marus, Karniji to whom Bika was indebted for his success in the foundation of Bikanere, is worshipped as a goddess. Her oath is considered as the most solemn adjuration frequently used by the Charans. One Awarji is famous for having miraculously dried up the Hakra or Kuggar river which once flowed in Mallani. The Kachhela females form a large proportion of Shaktis or personification of female energy, and are distinguished by the black cloths, they always wear. They are greatly feared for their future imprecation of woe and ruin, and they usually keep in their mouth till mid-day, a datan or tooth brush of the nimb tree as a precaution to remove the ill affect of a curse they might happen to pronounce upon any person.

THE BHATS:

The Bhats form a class of genealogists. They are the hereditary family bards. Mr. Wilson derives the word from Bhata or Bhatta popularly formed from Bhatni, a nourisher or protector, and figuratively applied to mendicant and learned Brahmans. They are said to be an illegitimate-tribe, and the Revd. M. A. Sherring gives three different traditions of their origin, though he places no reliance on any of them. "They are said to have sprung," says he, from the union of a Kashatriya with a Vaisya woman but another account is that their common ancestors were a Kashatriya father and a Brahman widow; while, by a third tradition, the Bhats are said to be the progeny of a Brahman father, and a Sudra mother." Speaking of their fabulous origin, Sir Henry Elliot says "that they were produced to amuse Parvati from the drops of sweat on Siwa's brow, but as they chose to sing his praises rather than hers; they were expelled from heaven and condemned to live a wandering life, as terrestrial bards."

There are three tribes of Bhats in Marwar, viz. (1) the Birm-Bhat (2) the Bahi-Bhat and (3) the Rani-Munga Bhat.

The Birm Bhats claim their descent from Kavi, a son of Brahma. They are chiefly found in the North-Western Provinces, and also in Gujrat where they occupy the same position as the Charans have in Rajputana. Their manners and customs are much like those of Brahmans, and they boast of having produced some of the greatest and most learned men from among their community. They eat flesh, but abstain from the use of liquor. They do not marry with the Bahi Bhats whom they regard as of inferior position. Nata is not allowed among them.

They claim a very remote ancestry and reference to them frequently occurs in the Mahabhartar or other ancient books of Hindu mythology, where they are known under twelve different names. They are as follow—

(1) Birm Rao, (2) Soot, (3) Magad, (4) Bandi, (5) Sarswati Putr, (6) Astuti Pathak, (7) Badi, (8) Nandi-kar, (9) Rai, (10) Bhut, (11) Nandi (12) Kani.

The Bahi Bhats abound in Rajputana and owe their origin to the Rajputs whose customs and manners they mostly follow, and have also the names of their sub-divisions similar to those of Rajputs. They generally keep the family record of Rajputs and preserve their genealogies. Their records are referred to if any dispute arises among them in matters of adoption or marriage contracts. "These men," says Col. Walter, are held in great awe, in the same way as Charans by all Hindus; they hold lands and sometimes villages rent free, they receive great largess at weddings, and if it is refused abuse the none-givers in song."

They were originally the bards of Parihar Rajputs, with whom they are said to have come to Marwar. They also receive gifts from Kalbis or Pitals who trace their origin from the Parihars.

They are also styled as Raja by their Jijmans or customers, who show them great respect when the latter visit their homes. They are given high seats, and are supplied with rich food to eat. They do not care to clean the vessels in which they take their food, which duty is generally discharged by the females of their hosts. They feel offended if any body calls them Bhats, and are not then easily to be softened down. To avoid such troubles the Pushkarna Brahmans have altogether dispensed with their Bhats, and have even destroyed the Bahis which the Bhats possessed and which contained the record of their families.

On occasions of betrothals, the father of the bridegroom presents some cocoanuts and Rs. 16 or Rs. 18 in cash to the bride's father, who then distributes opium to his relations. The marriage comprises four phas and all the ceremonies, of torun, samela, and parjan as are observed by other castes. The bride's father generally receives the sum of Rs. 84 from the father of the bridegroom.

Nata is also permitted among them when the parents of the widow are paid Rs. 40. It is contracted at the night time, and the bride is taken by her new husband not through the main gate, but by some other door temporarily made for the purpose.

Adoption is also made among them from some nearest relations.

The Bahi-Bhats of Marwar, comprise several tribes among them, including also the Birm-Bhats. They are:—

- (1) The Birm Bhat.
- (2) The Bahi Bhat.
- (3) The Chandisa Bhat.
- (4) The Bona Bhat.
- (5) The Sasni Bhat.
- (6) The Borwa Bhat.
- (7) The Tori Bhat.
- (8) The Kedarī Bhat.

The Chandisa Bhats keep genealogies of and are paid by the Brahmans, Rajputs, Kalbis, Pitals, Sothar, Kumhars, Nais and Darzis.

The Bonas generally load bullocks, and in the district of Phalodi, some also beg from the Palliwal Brahmans.

The Sasni Bhats are chiefly those who enjoy Sasan lands. They abound in the district of Sanchor.

The Borwas are mostly found at Meywar and Dhundars where they record genealogies of the Rajputs.

The Toris are the Bhats of Mochis and Megwals.

The Kedaris generally wear red clothes and roam about during the night begging alms from the villagers.

Each of these tribes is again sub-divided into numerous clans in which they intermarry, but they do not marry in their own clan.

The Rani-Munga Bhats confine themselves to the record of the genealogies of the Ranis or females of Rajput chiefs. They are called Rani-Mungas because they are contented to receive gifts only from the Ranis and do not attend upon the chiefs. They declare that their ancestor named Hari Karan was made a Bhat by Sita, the wife of Ramchundra, and hence the origin of their profession. They do not marry with the Birm-Bhats, but can form such alliances with the Bahi-Bhats. Widow marriage is not practised among them.

The Bhats have also their own genealogists, who are called Bahi-Bun-cha Bhats. They are found chiefly in the district of Jodhpore, but they cannot eat or smoke with the ordinary Bhats who even do not touch their vessels.

There is another tribe in Marwar called Bhat-Charan said to have sprung from the union of Bhats and Charans. The tradition of their origin is that a Charan of Barsara clan named Mawal who was the Pal-pat or family Charan of the Raja of Bhuj, had two daughters, whom he took with him to join the marriage of the daughters of Raja Sidh Raj Jai Singh of Gujrat. A party of Charans also happened to come there to receive Tiag in the marriage, but on account of darkness and fowl weather, they were forced to lie down on the open ground. The young girls hated the Charans for their being so degraded, and took a vow not to be married with them, which fact was a source of some anxiety to their father, Mawal. He at last, arranged to give the hands of one of his daughters in marriage to a Bhat named Malwan whose descendants came to be called as Bhat-Charans. They do no form marriage connexious either with the Charans or with the Bhats, but have their own sub.divisions who intermarry. Their number is very few in Marwar, but they abound in Gujrat.

The other daughter was married to a Bhati Rajput named Chanda whose son Nanka, who used to compose verses, was made a Pal-pat by Raja Raipal of Marwar. The Roharia Charans claim their descent from him.

THE MOTISARS.

The Motisars sing the praises of Charans and receive largess from them. They form a caste of beggers, which as Col, Walter remarks is peculiar to Marwar. According to the fable of their origin, they claim descent from the combination of eight Rajput tribes. Manak Rao Chaora, the nephew of Sidh Raj Jai Singh of Gujrat was a very intelligent boy. Mawal Charan once composed a poem in praise of Sidh Raj Jai Singh which Manak committed to memory, and as it was recited, he declared it to be his production, thereby giving a severe defeat to Mawal. Mawal then tried to please Manak's father by reciting poems in his praises, and he at last succeeded in taking under his charge, Manak Rao, who was also joined by his other Rajput friends. Mawal made all of them his Charan, and out of the great affection he entertained for them, he used to call them Motisars, which name came to be applied to their descendants. As they were eight in number, they are divided into as many clans after their own names, and they all intermarry. In Marwar only five clans are found, and they are very few in number.

The Môtisais are not generally learned, but they are said to have a natural taste for poetry and can compose the best verses and Kabits as the Charans do. They are much respected by the Charans when they visit their homes to receive charities. They are paid Tiag when the marriages of Charans take place, and on occasions of marriages of the Rajputs they also share the payment with the Charans. Their customs and manners correspond to those of Rajputs and Charans.

THE RAWALS.

The Rawals are the Nakkals or buffoons of the Charans. In Marwar their number is very small, and they are found chiefly in the districts of Sojat and Jaitaran. They are also found in Gujrat. They claim descent from a Brahman, and the story of their origin runs as follows. There was once a Raja of Junagudh whose title was Rawal. One day, as he went out on a hunting excursion, he felt thirsty in the way, and sought the house of a Charan, where he was attracted by a young Charni. The girl, out of the great respect for the royal guest, wanted to mark tilak on the forehead of the Raja, but he refused. This enraged the damsel, who pronounced imprecation on the Raja, and by her curse, he instantly became a eunuch or hinjra and began to sing and dance. He thus formed a pleasant amusement for the Charan community of the place, for a few years, but after his death, a Brahman who used to accompany the Raja there, was made to sing and dance in his place. He got the appellation of Rawal, and became the ancestor of a tribe of the same name.

The Rawals follow the manners and customs of the Charans from whom alone they beg, and in whose presence chiefly, they play their performances. Their party usually consists of twelve persons and they wander from village to village doing the tamasha, during the winter season. The presence of a Charan is considered to be absolutely necessary for the purpose, and they never play if one is not present. In case none be available, they usually make a doll of grass, and taking it for a Charan, begin their play under its auspices. If a Charan refuses to see their performances or does not satisfy them in their demands, they leave the place and go about singing his infamy. Sometimes they make an effigy of him, and treat him with disrespect. They do not play during the summer nights as they usually say—Rat thori aur Sang ghana, i. e. summer nights are too short for their performances.

THE MIRASIS.

The Mirasi is a Musalman genealogist, and occupies the same position among the Musalmans as the Bhats do among the Rajputs. Mr. Ibbetson derives the word from the Arabic Mira; meaning inheritance. The name is often abbreviated into Mir, which must not be confounded with the appellation frequently used by the Sayads. The Mirasi forms one of the twelve tribes of minstrels. He is also a musician, and teaches the girl singing and dancing.

There are three tribes of Mirasis in Marwar, viz. (1) the Joré (2) the Kalet, and (3) the Kanota. They are all converted Hindus, and belong to the Sunni sect. They intermarry with each other, but they do not marry with the Nakkarchis and Tashawalas or beaters of kettle-drums. The Jores are said to have come to Jodhpore from Multan, and the Kalets trace their descent from the Desi Pathans of Didwana.

The Kanota Mirasis declare themselves to be the descendents of a Gour Brahman. Their ancestor named Chandan is stated to have been in the service of some Mohamedan emperor as a flute-player, and is said to have interceded for the release of some Kayasths of Bhiwani clan who were also in the service there as treasurers and whom the emperor had imprisoned for some fault. The emperor acceded to Chandan's request on condition of his accepting Mohamedanism, which he did, and the prisoners were consequently set free. They came to Marwar where Chandan also accompanied them. He is said to have constructed a small well near Didwana which is still known as Chandan kui. Chandan's services were not forgotten by the Kayasths and his descendents still enjoy the privilege of receiving some lag or tax from the Bhiwani community of Marwar on all occasions of marriage and death.

The women of the Mirasis also sing. Formerly they used to wear blue clothes, but now they use trousers and a tilak or an Angarkha in the form of a petticoat. The widows are not allowed to marry or to contract Nata.

THE DOMS.

The Doms in Marwar do not form a separate tribe from those of Dholis and Mirasis. According to Sir H. M. Elliot, they are a tribe of Musalmans descended from Bhats, and are more generally known by the name of Mirasi and Pakhawaji. The term Dom is considered a very low designation by the Dholis and Mirasis, as the word Runghar is by the Rajputs, or Kirar by the Mahajans. In Oudh it is applied to sweepers or Bhangis. A very few of the poor classes of Mirasis in Marwar, have, however, returned themselves as Doms, and they appear separately in our schedules. They follow the same customs and manners as the Mirasis do.

WRITERS.

Among the writers are included Kayasth, Khatri and Oswal, whose aggregate number in Marwar as returned in the present Census came up to 155,335. They form the second most numerous group of the Professional class B; the Priests only exceeding them in number. They bear a proportion of 6·16 per cent to the total population of Marwar. The respective figures for each caste are:—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Kayasth	...	2,877	3,278	6,155
Khatri	...	3,047	3,622	6,669
Oswal	...	66,966	75,555	142,521
<hr/>
Total	...	72,890	82,455	155,345

THE KAYASTH.

The Kayasths form the chief class of writers in Marwar. They claim descent from Chatargupta, the son of Brahma, as mentioned in the Padam-Puran and the Kayasth Ethnology. Sir John Malcolm says that "their origin is coeval with the invention of letters; that they were created to be an intellectual not a labouring class; and they in consequence deem themselves devoted to learning." Sir H. M. Elliot derives the word Kayasth from Sanskrit kaya body and stha remaining. "When Parasu Ram," says he, "destroyed the Kshatriyas, the pregnant women of that caste fled and the children to whom they subsequently gave birth, having been concealed during the massacre in the wombs of their mothers, were called Kayasths."

They are divided into twelve tribes called after the names of the twelve sons of Chatargupta, but they do not intermarry.

They are:—

(1) Mathur	...	(5) Surajdhaj	...	(9) Balmik	...
(2) Bhatnagar	...	(6) Amisht	...	(10) Aithana	...
(3) Sribastab	...	(7) Gour	...	(11) Kalsarisht	...
(4) Saksena	...	(8) Karan	...	(12) Nigam	...

There are two divisions of Kayasths in Marwar, viz. (1) the Desis or the natives of the place, and (2) the Pardesis or the foreigners.

The Desis are all Mathurs, who take their name from Mathura, whence they originally came. Their local name is Puncholi, which seems to be derived from Puncholpura, a village near Delhi from which place they came to Marwar. Some say, they are called Puncholis from their knowledge of the five elements. Another theory is that originally there were four castes, namely, the Brahmans, the Kshatriyas, the Vaisyas, and the Sudras, but the profession which the Kayasths follow corresponded to none of them. Hence they formed a fifth class called Puncholi from punch five and Oli line.

They are divided into eighty-four clans among which they can form matrimonial alliances; but not in their own clan. In Marwar there are found 17 clans of the Puncholis, as noted below:—

(1) Manak-Bhandari	...	(10) Sirbhi
(2) Jhamaria	...	(11) Manijitwal
(3) Bhiwani	...	(12) Charcholia
(4) Narnolia	...	(13) Utrelia
(5) Nag	...	(14) Nepalia
(6) Khuja	...	(15) Kakrania
(7) Gadaria	...	(16) Koli
(8) Lawaria	...	(17) Galghotia
(9) Meratwal	...

Of these, the most ancient family is that of Manak-Bhandaris, whose ancestor named Kalpat Rai is said to have come to Raja Manak Deo of Sambhar in about the seventh century. He was the first man who produced salt from the Sambhar lake which has proved to be a source of enormous income to the authorities concerned. Manak Deo granted Kalpat Rai some annuity out of the salt income for his valuable discovery, which is still enjoyed by his posterity.

Next to them come the Jhamarias and the Bhiwanis who are very numerous in Marwar. Khimsi, a Jhamaria Puncholi is said to have been appointed for the first time, as a Subedar at village Khatu, by Ghayas-uddin Tuglak. At the time, when Rao Chunda obtained the Fort of Mundore through the help of some Enda Rajputs and the Emperor advanced his army against him, it was only through the medium of Khimsi that the fort was restored to Chunda, who then made Dhan Raj, the son of Khimsi his pardhan or minister. From that time the Jhamaria Puncholis held important posts in the state as is evident from the magnificence of their dwelling houses.

Bhianji was the ancestor of the Bhiwanis, who came to Marwar while very young. His father Soda, was in the service of the Emperor of Delhi, whose displeasure he incurred, and was ordered to be put to death. Bhian was brought to Marwar by his cook and he sought refuge at Khatu where Khimsi gave him his daughter in marriage.

The Pardesis or the foreigners who are generally styled Lala comprise the Saksena, the Mathur, the Bhatnagar and the Siribastab, but they are very small in number and date their migration to Marwar in the present century.

No trace of the Nigams and Gour is at present found in Marwar but from the old inscriptions, it is evident that they were also once very prominent in Marwar, about the fourteenth century. The Nigams are said to have lived at Bhiumal, and the Gour at Ladnu.

Both the Desi and the Pardesi Kayasths can intermarry, though they differ in some of their customs peculiar to their different localities. Among the Desi Pancholis, a sum of Rs. 110 is paid on occasions of marriage by the bridegroom's father to the parents of the bride. Just before the marriage procession, the ceremony of worshipping a horse is performed by the bridegroom's mother. When the bridegroom reaches the bride's house to touch the toran, the Pirohit or the maternal uncle of the bride generally takes her in his lap and walks seven times round the bridegroom. Four phas are then observed at the chowri round the sacred fire. In the first three rounds, the bridegroom preceeds the bride, but in the fourth he follows her. The Kayasths generally worship Devi and observe fast for nine days in the months of Asoj and Chet every year, which festival is called Noratri. They eat flesh and drink liquor, but the females generally abstain from its use in Marwar. They call it bahari tarkari from the fact that it is usually prepared out of the main Rasoi or Chula where the bread is cooked.

Parda system is observed among the Kayasths, though not very strictly among the Desis, whose females go out wearing a shawl which forms their distinguishing dress in Marwar. They do not fetch water, nor do they employ themselves at the spinning-wheel. Widow marriage is not allowed among them, nor is Nata or Karewa permitted.

The Kayasths have been once a great race, having enjoyed the special privilege of holding offices of trust under the Musalman rulers of India. They follow no other profession but that of the pen. They regard it a sin, as remarks Sir John Malcolm, "to use in mean offices hands which God has expressly made for the noble purpose of writing." They worship Dawat or inkstand twice in a year at the Diwali and Holi festivals, just as the Rajputs worship their sword on the Daserah. They are stated by Sir Henry Elliot, to be the Greeks of the lower Empire. They are remarkable for their intellect and ready compliance with the wishes of their masters.

THE KHATRIS.

The Khattris are not of so much importance in Marwar as they are in the Panjab, where as says Sir George Campbell, they are the chief civil administrator, and have almost all literate work in their hands. They claim to be originally the Kshatriyas, but it is doubtful. In Marwar, they are said to have come from Sindh and Jeysulmere, as well as from the Panjab. They now follow different trade, many among them employing themselves in dying turbans for men and scarves for women, which as Col. Walter says are peculiar to this part of the country. As some among the Khatri shopkeepers also sell things openly to the Bhangis which no Mahajan in Jodhpore would do, they occupy a somewhat low position among the Mahajans. They are divided into twelve Khamps or clans, each having eight sub-divisions of which the chief found in Marwar are:—

(1) Kiri, (2) Girach, (3) Bhut, (4) Buchhra, (5) Chhuncha, (6) Dolora, (7) Dara, (8) Ghara, (9) Mocha, (10) Sarsera, (11) Badi, (12) Jalécha, (13) Bhichu, (14) Gajkand, (15) Dabbur, (16) Dajphar, (17) Soni, (18) Gela.

They are mostly Shivites and their Priests are the Sarsut Brahmans with whom they can eat together. Sarasur Rishi, the ancestor of the Sarsut Brahmans, is said to have protected the Khattris from the destructive hands of Parsu Ram, in consideration of which his descendants receive Rs. 4 on occasions of betrothals, and Rs. 16 at the time of marriage from the Khattris. The Khattris do not receive money on the occasion of their daughter's marriage as is the case with other Mahajans. Nata or Karewa is also not practised among them.

In Marwar, they abstain from the use of liquor and meat, and do not eat food from the hands of any other caste with the exception of Brahmans Rajputs, Kayasthi and Mahajans.

Their females do not observe Parda and they generally wear petti-coat of chintz which contains impressions or prints lengthwise locally called Adi-bel.

THE OSWALS.

The Oswals form the largest proportion of the group, and Marwar being their original country, they are found here in large numbers chiefly in the east and south. In comparison with other Mahajan castes, a greater portion of them is employed as mutسادis or writers in the State, other members of the community become traders and are generally well off in Marwar as well as abroad. "The laity of the Khertara sect," says Colonel Tod, "sends forth thousands to all parts of India and the Oswals so termed after the name of Osi (now known Osián, ruins of which are found scattered some 30 miles north of the city of Jodhpur, and where they formerly lived) estimate one hundred thousand families; whose occupation is commerce. All these claim Rajput descent. The wealth, acquired in foreign lands from the Sutlej to the ocean returns chiefly to the native soil."

"Mr. Lawrence, Asst. to the Agent to the Governor-General in Rajputana" says Mr. Ibbetson, "is of opinion that the Jains are divided into two sects, the Degambras or Saraogis and the Swetambaras or Oswals. The term Oswal however, is a tribal and not a sectarian name and is quite independent of religion."

The story current about their origin is that in consequence of some disagreement between Opal Deo and his father, Bhim Sen Punwar, Raja of Aboo, the former had to seek refuge and protection with the Raja of Mundore, who treated him kindly and sent him to village Osian, where he established his full authority. Shortly after, a Jain priest, Ratan Parbhu Suria, by name, happened to come there with his disciple, and begged for alms but was given nothing. This enraged the Jati, who by force of his incantations sent a snake which bit the Raja's son, Jag Chand, to death. When the body was being carried to be burnt, the Jati sent word to the Raja promising him to revive his lamented son in consideration of his request being granted. The Raja gave his consent, and another snake was accordingly sent who sucked up the poison. In compliance with the Jati's request, half the people of village, Osian, were converted to Jainism, on Sawan Sudh 8, Samvat, 282. By degrees, other people joined them; and subsequently, two divisions were formed called Dasas and Bisas, who do not intermarry though they may eat together.

The converts comprised the following Rajput tribes:—

Punwar, Sisodia, Rathor, Chohan, Solunkhi, Sankhela, Burat, Parihar Boráná, Goyal, Moyal, Daiyá, Bhatí, Makwana, Kachhwaha, Gour.

Though the Oswals are almost all originally Rajputs and mostly follow the profession of Mutsadis, they are included among the Mahajans, who form a community of twelve and a half niats or castes.

The Mutsadi Oswals regard themselves as belonging to a higher status than the others, who are either Potalia (Peddlers) traders, money lenders, or kamdars of the Jagirdars.

The wives and daughters of the Mutsadis observe Parda and will never step out of the house except in a rath or surrounded with a bevy of attendants.

Most of the Oswals are devoted to Jainism. They place their faith in Parasnath, Mahabir Swami and other prophets of the Jain religion called Tir Thankars; a very few however profess Vishnuism. They call their community Sing, the oath of which, when pronounced by the leading men of their caste, is a binding one.

The Jatis are priests of the Jain religion and are consulted more than the Brahmans in determining auspicious occasions for the celebration of matrimonial alliances. In Jodhpur, the Opadhia Brahmans (a sub-division of Pushkarnas) assisted by a Srimali Brahman, and elsewhere the Saiwaks conduct the marriage ceremonies of the Oswals. The bride's parents are paid in cash by the bridegroom's father and the payment so made is called Beohar which is fixed by the common consent of the contracting parties.

The Oswals do not perform any ceremony for the propitiation of the souls of the dead, as the Hindus do; but on the 5th, 7th, or 9th day after death the relatives of the deceased give a dinner to their community brethren which is called Nhawania and get themselves shaved on that day and perform the ceremony of pagri-bandhna.

The Oswals do not contract nata.

The sub-divisions of Oswals are very complicated in as much as it is said that a Jain priest who had for series of years devoted his attention to forming a catalogue, which then contained nearly 1800 classes, renounced his object obtaining from a brother priest, from a distant region, 150 new names to add to his list.

The chief families of rank and influence among the Mutsadis are Mohnot, Bhandari, Singhi, Lodha and Mohta.

THE MOHNOT.

Rao Raipal, Rathore, who was the ruler of Kher, had a son, Mohansi, who went to Jeysulmere, where he took a fancy to the daughter of the Dewan of the State, who was a Sri-Simal by caste. The Dewan complained against Mohansi to the Rawal who brought about the conversion of the latter in order to marry the "lady of his love" in about the Samvat year 1391. The descendants of his former wife, who was a Bhati by caste, are denominated Mohnia Rathors, whereas those of the latter are known as Mohnots.

After some generations the Mohnots migrated to Marwar where they distinguished themselves in Raj service. Of these, Jaimal flourished during the time of Maharaja Guj Singh; and Surat Ram during the reigns of Maharajas Bakht Singh and Bije Singh; while Gian Mull held high office during the days of Maharaja Man Singh. Nensi, who was once imprisoned and asked to pay a lac of rupees as ransom by Maharaja Jaswant Singh, under whom he held an important post, preferred suicide to parting with such a large sum of money. The last words, he uttered, form the text of the following couplet, which serves as an illustration of proverbial niggardliness.

Lakh Lakhran nipje Bar pipal re sakh—natio Mohta Nensi tanbo den talak.
(Lac is found with the lacquerers or on the Bar and Pipal trees; Mohta Nensi has refused to pay copper even).

Some of the descendants of Mohahnsi are called Thakars, while others are styled Mohnots in Marwar and Mehtas in Kishengurh and Oodeypur.

They are generally attached to Jainism but the descendants of Nensi have reverted to Vishnuism from the time of Maharaja Bije Singh.

The Mohnots do not wear a blackened shoe and will not burn the wood of the nimb tree to which they pay particular regard as they consider it to be a special favourite of their family deity, Nagnechi, at whose temple they get their children shaved for the first time after birth.

THE BHANDARI.

The Bhandaris trace their origin from the Chohan family of Ajmere. Their ancestor, Lakhansi Chohan; according to their tradition was the Raja of Sambhar and Nadole; who having no offspring, prayed to the family deity, Asapura. In course of time, the Raja was blessed with 24 sons, of whom one, named Dadrao was entrusted with the charge of Bhandar viz. store-house, after whom his descendants came to be called Bhandaris. He was converted to Jainism by a priest called Jaso Bhadro Suria in about the Samvat year 1049.

The Bhandaris came to Marwar during the time of Rao Jodha, whom they are said to have greatly assisted under their leader, Nara Bhandari, by opposing the Meywar forces at Jhilwara, when advancing against him. The Bhandaris boast of having done very enterprising deeds for their masters and having consequently long held the highest posts in the state viz. those of Dewan, Bakhshi and the Musahibat. "Bhandari Rugnath," according to Colonel Walter, "ruled Marwar in his master's name for a number of years, during the time that Maharaja Ajit Singh was at Delhi"—which fact is well preserved in the Hindi couplet. Aji Dili ro Patso—Raja tau Rugnath i.e. Maharaja Ajit Singh was the emperor of Delhi and Rugnath, the Raja of Marwar.

The manners and customs of the Bhandaris are the same as those of other Oswal tribes. The temple of their family deity, Asapura, is at Nadole, where a fair is held twice a year. They will not buy a black cow, a black goat or a black buffalo, though they will take them as presents.

The Bhandaris generally adopt Raj service. They have their own sub-divisions, which do not intermarry among themselves. Their females observe Parda and unlike other Oswal women, do not use the head ornament called "Bor."

THE SINGHI.

The Singhis were originally Nandwana Brahmans of Sirohi. Their conversion to Jainism, as in the case of the parent caste of Oswals, is ascribed to the spell-bound snake, having bitten Son Pal, whose life was similarly saved by a change of religion. Son Pal with his family and other intending pilgrims made a pilgrimage to Setrunja, where a son, Sangha, was born, who was a very promising and clever boy. While quite young, he was taken into Raj service by the Rao of Sirohi and was given in dowry at his own request to Rao Gangaji of Jodhpore, where he distinguished himself in the Raj service.

He had 3 sons:—

- (1)—Chanpsi, from whom the Bhimrajot Singhis trace their lineage, who have held for some generations the post of Bakhshi in the State.
- (2)—Rana, from whom the Mulchandots descend, who abound in Sojat.
- (3)—Padamsi, from whom the Raimalot, Partap Malot, Sukhmalot, and Sehmalot Singhis are descended.

THE LODHA.

The Lodhas are generally called Sah—a title which is said to have been bestowed on their ancestors, Todar Mull and Chhaj Mull, by the Emperors of Dehli.

The tradition, connected with their origin is that a round limbless piece of flesh like Lodh was born to a certain Lakhansi, Chohan, a Subadar of Chohan Prithi Raj; who took the same to the temple of Barlai Mata, situate in Bhadana, Pargana Nagore; where some water was sprinkled over it when on a sudden, the limbs sprouted; the transformed child was named Lodha after Lodh which he formerly resembled. He was made an Oswal by a Jati, named Jansurji. The Lodhas remained for some time at Dehli, their descendants migrated to Ajmere, and thence to Marwar.

There are four sub-divisions of Lodhas:—Todar Malot, Chhaj Malot, Ratan Malot, and Bharsingot. Of these, the Todar Malots who are Vishnuites alone be-take themselves to Raj service, and the other three who follow Jainism, generally become shop-keepers. The Lodhas, says Col. Walter, have held offices of high position and honor in Marwar.

The characteristic features of this caste may be briefly summarised.

The Lodha women after the birth of a child, have to go first to the temple of Barlai Mata (their Kul-Devi) before they can leave their house for any other place.

From the 1st to the 10th of the months of Chet and Asoj, the women are forbidden to use menhdi on the hands or lamp black in the eyes; the men on the other hand are neither allowed to change their clothes nor to get themselves shaved.

Like Bhandaris they do not purchase, but unlike them, they do not even keep, a black cow or a black goat.

Unlike other Oswals, they do not worship the potter's wheel at the time of marriage.

It may however be observed that the Lodhas who live in the foreign countries do not so strictly follow these restrictions as their brethren of Marwar.

THE MOHTA:

The Mohtas are generally the Kamdars of the Jagirdars. They were formerly their "basi" or slaves whose allegiance they could not throw off without obtaining a written deed of acquittance by making a payment of money according to their position. The Jagirdars exacted neo'a and tika on occasions of death and marriage respectively and deprived them of every thing, if any fault was committed. The principal advantage in becoming a basi was that "basis" were exempted from the lagbag which was levied on other subjects.

The Mohtas are also termed choti-kut from the fact that their choti was shaved when they became basi, which custom has given rise to a proverb—Bigra Bania hoā Moh'a (a Mahajan when degraded becomes Mohta).

There are numerous sub-divisions of Mohtas; but we will here deal with those who come under the category of writers, the chief of whom are the following:—

- (1) Bhandsali Mohtas—They were originally Bhatīs, and were converted to Jainism at Jeysalmere in about the Samvat 1112. In the time of Rao Jodha they came to Jodhpore as part of the dowry of a Rani of his; but on one of them being put to death by the Durbar, the Bhandsalis turned to trade; recently, however, they have again reverted to Raj service. They are regarded as the "chowdris" or headmen of the Oswal tribe. The children of the Bhandsalis do not wear the "choti" till they reach their ninth year.

(2) Bagrecha Mohtas—They are said to have been descended from Sonigra Chohans, who were afterwards converted to Jainism. They derive their name from village Bagar, in the Jalore district where they formerly resided, and were taken into Raj service in the reign of Maharaja Jaswant Singh.

(3) Kochar Mohtas—They trace their lineage from Kochar—who took this name from the titting of a bird of that name at the time of his birth.

Chhajar Mohtas—They trace their descent from Ram Deo, Dhandal Rathore, who gave a son of his, Kajal by name, to the Mahajans, from whom he had borrowed large sums of money for distribution as tiyag among the Charans and Bhats, at the time of his marriage. Kajal was converted to Jainism; but retaining the innate military instinct of a true Rajput, was never on good terms with his new associates; who complained against him to Ram Deo. Kajal was ordered to be put to death but not by means of a cudgel or sword. He was accordingly struck down with loaf-sugar. One of his sons added a golden chhaja (a sort of gallery) to a temple and hence the name Chhajar.

Baid Mohtas—They were the Punwar Rajputs of Osian, where they adopted the Jain religion. One of their ancestors cured one of the Emperors of Delhi, who was suffering from eye disease, and from that time on wards they came to be called Baid (physician) Mohtas.

Sadayat Mohtas—They frequently became sureties to the Raj for payment of sums due from Jagirdars. In order to obtain the protection of the Dewans and Bakhshis, who were generally Oswals, they gave their daughters in marriage to them; when Pancholi Lal Chand became the Dewan of Maharaj Abhé Singh, he demanded the hand of a girl of their clan in accordance with the usage, established by his predecessors and as a necessary adjunct to the post of the Dewan. The Sadayats are said to have purchased their deliverance by making a large payment to the Pancholi Dewan.

Banda Mohtas—They formerly lived in Jalore. Mohita Akhe Raj was the kamdar of the Thakar of Ahore, and was released from his basi by order of Maharaja Man Singh, who took him into Raj service. His descendants held the post of Dewan during the reign of Maharajas Man Singh and Takht Singh.

MUSICIANS AND BALLAD RECITERS.

The Dholis and Dhadis are the only castes returned in Marwar under this group. They are both Hindus as well as Musalmans. The respective figures for them are as follow.

Dholi	...	Hindu.	3,768	3,011	6,779
Do.	...	Musalman.	1,503	1,163	2,666
Dhadi	...	Hindu.	784	429	1,213
Do.	...	Musalman.	214	188	402
Total			...	6,269	4,791
					11,060

THE DHOLIS.

The Dholis are the beaters of drums; the name being derived from Dhol, a drum. They claim descent from Gandharab, an arial minstrel or demi-god inhabiting India's heaven. They are also known in Marwar by the name of Nakarchi, Damami or Jachak. In Jeypore they are called Ranas, and in Méywar they go under the name of Bharats.

Originally there were three sub-division among the Dholis, viz. (1) the Bhet, (2) the Kattu and (3) the Kalet. But subsequently, as several Rajput tribes joined them, other clans were also formed, the chief of which are as noted below.

(1) The Jorias were originally Chohans but being overwhelmed by the Mohamedans they adopted the profession of Dholis. They generally beg from the Chohans of Sanchores.

(2) The Gilas trace their origin from the Palliwal Brahmans who dwelt at village Osian.

(3) The Dhcdras claim descent from a Parihar Rajput who was forced to beat drums by Rao Duharji on occasion of his once worshipping his family goddess, the Nag-Neehian.

(4) The Disars owe their origin to Deora Rajputs who were made Dholi at mount Abu.

(5) The Magar were formerly the Sindhal Rathors.

(6) The Dangis trace descent from the Rathors. When Chanda Bhati was made a Roharia Charan by Raipal Rathor, his son Dangaji was taken captive by the Jeysulmere Rawal and married to a Dholi woman. An army was sent after him and Dangi was brought back, but as he was married to a Dholi woman, he was made a Dholi by Raipal on payment of 1½ lac of rupees. The descendants of Dangi prior to his becoming a Dholi are called Dangi Rathors and they abound in Marwar as well as in Malwa, whereas those descended from him by the Dholi woman are known by the name of Dangi-Dholis. The following couplet explains the origin of this clan.

- (1) Duhar sut Raipál tás sut Mohan Dangi.
- (2) Chánd Súraj kí sákh ek báchá men mángí.
- (3) Howe bans Ráthore aise men dákhon to sún.
- (4) Achal that maryád yahí men mángon to sún.
- (5) Sawá lákh dhan Sampio Kamadhjan mor mote kurb.
- (6) Dholí Dhangí thápio Mohnot Mohan sut sarb.

It may be thus explained—

“Dúhar’s son was Raipál who had (two sons) Mohan and Dangi.
 “(Dangi accosted his father) in the name of the sun and moon I ask a boon.

“What I want to tell is that the clan of Rathors should always pay customary respects (to my descendants). This is a thing I ask for.

“ (Upon which the father) granted a gift of 1½ lac of rupees and made them (the descendants) head of Rathors and respectable and named the descendants of Dangi as Dholis and those of Mohan, as Mohnots.

The Dholis of Marwar generally follow the manners and customs of Rajputs. They are the followers of Shaktik religion, and they worship Mala-Nur as their Pir. They eat flesh and drink liquor. They are considered a low caste, especially by the Nais, Dhobis and Bhangis who regard them as the offspring of a sweeper mother and a Rajput father. But at the same time the Dholis of Jodhpore boast of having once held the post of Musahib in Marwar during the time of Maharaja Ram Singh. The name of the incumbent was Umia and his descendants are still considered as the leaders among their community in Jodhpore.

They excell in drum-beating, some among them also cultivate land, but only the Kharif crop. They generally feel cold, much and whenever any body appears wearing too many clothes he is denominated in Marwar slang to be a Dholi. They beg from every caste, but they also have their own beggars called Gudh-Munga, and their own Bhats too, who preserve their genealogies. There are also some buffoons among the Dholis, especially of the Gorel clan, which profession they are said to have adopted from the time of Maharaja Bhim Singh, about 100 years ago.

The females of the Dholis called Dholans also sing, but they do not dance. Nata or Karewa is not permitted. No daughter is taken in marriage from a family, for four generations, to which one is given.

The Musalman Dholis chiefly belong to the Dangi clan. They were converted to Mohamedanism during the reign of Aurangzeb, and are all Sunnis. They follow both the Hindu and Musalman ceremonies. They do not eat pork or Jhatka meat. Their females wear the Ghagra or petti-coat like Hindus.

THE DHADIS.

The Dhadis like the Dholis are also musicians, chiefly playing upon violins, and claiming Rajput ancestry. They are Hindus as also Musalmans. The Hindus generally beg from Jats, Bishnois, Sonars, Khattris with the exception of Rajputs. They can smoke with the Mirasis though they can not mingle with the Musalman Dholis. The Musalman Dhadis also deduce their origin from the Rajputs. Their ancestor named Mala-Nur, a Rajput by caste is said to have been employed in playing music when the marriage procession of Raja Ram Chundra of Ayudhia passed for Janakpore, to which effect they still sing a song at the commencement of their performance. They chiefly abound in Thali or the sandy tract of Marwar where they are known by the name of Mangniar. They also keep genealogies of Rajputs and of Sindhi Musalmans. They follow almost all the Rajput ceremonies, marry in their own caste, and do not contract Nata. Their females also sing but do not dance. The clans of Musalman Dhadis as found in Marwar are—(1) Baora, (2) Sihai, (3) Bagama, (4) Didai, (5) Chamka, and (6) Palno.

DANCERS AND SINGERS.

The Dancers and Singers comprise both Hindus and Musalmans. They consist of Hinjra, Jagri-patar, Bhagtan and Kalawat. The proportion of females as a rule is in excess among them, being nine times as great as that of the males. The figures for them are as follow.

			Males.	Females.	Total.
Hinjra	...	Hindu.	116	...	116
Jagri-patar	...	Do.	75	1,714	1,789
Bhagtan	...	Do.	...	129	129
Kalawat	...	Musalman.	19	17	36

THE HINJRAS.

The Hinjras are Hindus as also Musalmans. They sing and dance, their music consisting of Dholak, and Majiras. They chiefly clap their hands when they sing. The Nazars or Khojás also belong to this class; the only difference being that the Hinjras have beards and mustaches, whereas the Nazars have not. The former wear the female dress and dance, whereas the latter generally go in male attire and are employed as guards to the Zenana Mahals or female's apartment. The Hinjras get themselves shaved so repeatedly, that it has given rise to a proverb "Hinjre ki kamai muchh mundai men gai," i. e. the Hinjras lose all what they earn in shaving their beards.

The Hindu Hinjras are known in Marwar by the name of Gatrara. They number 89 only in Marwar, and are chiefly found in the districts of Sojat and Jaitaran, especially in the villages lying at the foot of Goramji-ka Pahar (a small hill). It is said that there is often heard a noise of thunder coming out from the hill which is called Goramji ki-Gaj, and it is generally believed that a son, born at that time, is sure to be a eunuch or Hinjra. They now recruit their number by adopting chelas, though they formerly used to take away young boys for the purpose. They especially attend on the occasion of the birth of a son, when they are paid their dues.

The Musalman Hinjras, who were returned only 27 in Marwar; trace their descent from one Haji-Gur-Pir and belong to the Sunni sect. They also wear female dress as well as rings in the ears and nose and churas in the hand. They adopt chelas both from the Hindus and Musalmans, who generally change their original name to one, resembling that of a female. On the death of their guru or leader, they generally remove the lac or glass churas just as the Hindu women do, as a sign of mourning, on the demise of their husband, and wear silver churas instead.

JAGRI-PATARS.

The Jagris are beaters of small drums at dances and festivals. They are said to be originally Gehlot Rajputs. The tradition of their origin is that when Chitor was taken by the Emperor of Delhi, and the Gehlot Rajputs fled away from the place, some of them sought refuge at Ludarwa, the ancient capital of Jeysulmere, where having been forced to starvation they had no other alternative but to give their daughters up as public women. Thus a separate caste was formed; the male issues being called Jagris, and the female offsprings, Patars. Subsequently they migrated to Phalodi in Marwar and were maintained by a Kalla Brahman named Sindhu to whose descendants they still show some respect by never making any allusion to them in abusive songs, as already described.

The Jagris follow the Shaktik religion and worship Kalka Mata. The offerings made to the deity are generally taken by the Shamis. They do not take food from the hands of low caste people. They live as family men and marry with the Golas, an out-caste tribe of Rajputs. Nata is not permitted among them, but a widower can marry again. The wives do not sing or dance; which profession is exclusively followed by their daughters, who are called Patars.

The Patars, before they appear as public women, are also required to be married, though only nominally. On the fixed day, an earthen idol of Ganesh is brought by the family Brahman, and the ceremony of pheras is performed. In Marwar colloquialism, a worthless or an idle fellow is generally denominated as Patar's Ganesh.

The ordinary dress of a Patar consists of a Pajama or trousers, and an Angarkha or a coat, over which a Duppatta is also worn. A Patar abstains altogether from the company of a Musalman, howsoever great a temptation might be offered to her. If any one does so, she is sure to be excluded from the community.

The Patars of Marwar never use stone beams on the upper storey of their houses but thatch them with straw or tiles. Even if any rich family among them, wants to have a magnificent building constructed, the highest storey must be a thatched one. It serves to distinguish their houses from those of Bhagtans who do not observe such restrictions.

THE BHAGTAN.

The Bhagtans form another class of dancing girls in Marwar. They differ from the Patars in having no objection to the company of a Musalman with whom a Patar would never consort. The Bhagtans of the Jodhpore city date their origin from the time of Maharaja Bijé Singh. They were originally a few Ramawat Sadhu girls who turned out to be of loose character, and thus formed a separate caste though they cannot intermarry among the Jodhpore Sadhus. The Males are called Bhagats and their daughters are known by the name of Bhagtans, who alone and not the wives, follow the profession of dancing girls. The wives are generally called Sadhanis, and they are not allowed to contract Nata or Karewa.

It is necessary for a daughter among them to be nominally married before she enters on her profession, as it is considered a sin to allow their maiden girls to offer themselves to their infamous employment before the ceremony of marriage is performed. No betrothal takes place in such cases and the girl is only nominally married to a Sadhu who is always prepared to give up every connection with his bride on payment of a rupee or half. If, however no Sadhu is available, the ceremony of phera is performed by procuring the portrait of Ganesh, a Hindu divinity, invoked at the commencement of every affair.

THE KALAWAT.

The Kalawats are simply singers, as they do not dance at all. They number 36 in Marwar (males 19 and females 17). The name seems to be derived from the Sanskrit kala, art and vant, master. They are all Pardesi Musalmans and belong to the Sunni sect. There are two divisions of them in Marwar, the first comprising those, who were originally Gaur Brahmans and used to sing hymns or bhajans in the Hindu temples, but were converted to Mohamedanism by Mahmud of Ghazni when he destroyed the temples. The second division consists of those who originally belonged to the Tank clan of Chohan Rajputs and are now known as Tank-Sultan.

They strictly adhere to the tenets of their faith. They occupy a higher position among the Doms or Dhadis of Marwar, and their females are not allowed to contract Nata. They entertain a very high regard for Amir Khusro and Tan S  n whom they look upon as the inventors of the art of singing. They came in Marwar in the time of Maharaja Ajit Singh, and are said to have had flourished during the reign of Maharaja Man Singh who is stated to have a taste for the art. The following saying, said to have been addressed to Maharaja Man Singh, illustrates the fact.

“Jodh basai Jodhpore Birj Kini Bijpal.”

“Lucknow, Kashi, Dilli, ten Kini Nipal.” meaning to say, that Jodha founded Jodhpore, and Maharaja Bij   Singh made it a Birj by inviting Gosains from Mathura and Bindraban, but you have turned it into Lucknow, Delhi, Kashi and Nepal (by sending for singers and musicians from those places.)

ACTORS AND MIMERS!

THE BHAND.

The Bhands, as returned in the last census, are:—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Hindu ...	460	344	804
Mohamedan ...	66	52	118

The Mohamedan Bhands are few and far between, and there is nothing particular which distinguishes them. It is with Hindus, therefore, that we concern ourselves for the present. They have, generally speaking, sprung from Dholis who learn bufoonery, mimicing and jesting in foreign countries.

Unlike Behrupias, they do not assume a multitude of disguises in the characters of men and women; but like Naqáls they possess the ready wit of a story teller, joker and bufoon. They attend all joyous festivals and contribute their jokes, there-by entertaining as well as exciting bursts of applause from the spectators.. The subject of the satire of the plays or farces, which they represent, is as often their mythological fables, as the behaviour of their earthly rulers and governors.

Respecting the Bhands of Oudh, Mr. Carnegy observes, that they are the genealogists or bards, but he seems to confound them with Bhats. "The two are quite distinct," says Sir Elliot, "so much so that Bhands are frequently known by the name of Bhandela, which shows the distinction more plainly."

Mr. Ibbetson derives the word from "Bhanda" meaning bufooning, and regards Behrupia to be of a lower professional status. "Both," says he, "are commonly kept by Rajas and other wealthy men, like the Jester of the early English noble, but both also wander about the country and perform to street audiences. The Bhand is not a true caste any more than a Behrupia and I understand they are often Mirasis by caste and probably have in many cases so returned themselves. Elliot seems to imply that Behrupia is a caste, and Bhand an occupation, but the former statement is certainly not true in the Panjab."

The Bhands of Jodhpur are gorel Dholis who trace their descent from Kasla Chohan, alias Bhadar Khan, a member of the younger branch of Chatar Bhuj, Raja of Sanchor, who when reduced to straitened circumstances, devoted himself to the calling of a Dholi with a view to amend his fortunes. Jehun, one of the descendants of Bhadar Khan, emigrated to Jeypore. He was the father of Ráná—whose son, Dhanrup was created a Bhand by Maharaj Bhim Singh on the occasion of his exhibiting his surpassing skill when the Rajas of Jeypore and Jodhpore met together in Rupnagar, in Kishengarh, for the celebration of nuptials. He is said to have excelled and out-done Karela, another renowned Bhand of those times, who was in the service of Nawab Amar Khan. Dhan Rup enjoyed the charitable grant of the village of Sokhar in Bali, from the State of Marwar.

The Bhands of Jodhpore pride themselves on not begging of any one except Rajput nobles, while those of the "mofussil" beg at the door of every well-to-do person.

The Bhands do not marry in their own "nakh," their rites and ceremonies, however, resemble those of the Dholis, although they do not beat the drum.

CHAPTER IV.

CLASS C.—COMMERCIAL.

The class of Commercial castes, for which figures are given below, and which practically holds the whole commerce of Marwar in its hands, may broadly be divided into 3 groups viz. traders, pedlers, and carriers.

The total commercial population bears a proportion of 4 per cent to the total population of Marwar and is out-numbered by the Agricultural, Professional and Artizan classes only.

In point of numbers, the Hindus head the list, next to them come the Jains and last of all the Mohamedans. In every 38 Hindus, 7 Jains and 45 Mahomedans in Marwar, one would fall within the category of this class.

The figures for the groups are given below:—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Traders	37,097	46,262	83,359
Pedlers	2,080	1,711	3,791
Carriers	3,650	1,917	5,567
Unspecified	...	4,501	2,814	7,315
Total	...	47,328	52,704	100,032

TRADERS.

The group of Traders, consisting of the three religious sects of Hindus, Jains, and Mohamedans, forms the largest group in the commercial class and comprises nearly the thirtieth part of the total population of the State; as regards social standing also, it is not the least important. Traders are scattered over every part of Marwar but chiefly abound in the parganas of Jodhpore, Nagor, Merta, Jalore, Parbatsar, Didwana, Pachbhadra and Nawa.

The Marwari traders play an important part in the commerce of India also. There is hardly a town in India, where they do not cut a prominent figure. They have penetrated into the hearts of Calcutta, Madras, the North Western Provinces, and the Punjab, and occupy the first rank in the commercial population of those provinces. In Bombay they possess a street of their own. Their thrift and love of money is proverbial.

Sir J. Malcolm, speaking of the mercantile classes of Central India remarks that almost all the bankers and money brokers there, come either from Gujrat or Marwar, but the larger number from the latter country.

"Their connection with the State of Jodhpore," he says, "has brought crowds of its active and industrious inhabitants into Malwa and adjoining provinces; but the majority of these new settlers keep up their communication with their own country; many of them, indeed, return to pass the remainder of their days in their native land, selling their shares in concerns, which go down to a partnership in the smallest shops, to their younger countrymen, who come annually from Marwar to make their fortunes in Central India and the Deccan."

The group of traders consists of

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Mahajans	...	36,987	46,174	83,161
Bohras	...	110	88	198
Total	...	37,097	46,262	83,359

T H E M A H A J A N .

The term Mahajan literally signifying "great man" is usually used in Marwar for a Bania which is derived from the Sanskrit Baniyya, trader. Sah and Seth are the titles of respect generally applied to wealthy bankers. The epithet kirar, on the contrary, is considered a very low term for a Mahajan, and Led is regarded to be very abusive. The saying—kirar jitna birar (meaning as many shares as there are Banias) signifies that property is equally inherited among the sons of a Mahajan.

The Mahajans form the most prominent part, as a matter of fact, they comprise the whole group except an insignificant portion in which the Bohras are returned. They include all sorts of traders—those attached to the Jain religion, as well as those following Hinduism. In Marwar the Jaini Mahajans bear the largest proportion, comprising chiefly the Oswals, the Saraogis, the Porwals, the Sri-Mals, and the Sri Sri Mals. With very few exception they follow trade, though some Porwals become kamdars to the Jagirdars like the Mohtas. The Oswals, however, muster in greater numbers, and these have already been sufficiently dealt with, in connection with the Mutsadis. The Saraogis are found in Marot, Sambhar, Nawa, Nagor, Merta and Didwana. The Porwals are met with in Bali, Jalor, and other Parganas bordering Gujrat. The last two clans are few and far between in numbers.

Of the Mahajans following mostly Hinduism, the chief in Marwar are the Maheshri, the Agarwal, the Bija-bargi and the Sunga. They adopt the Raj service very rarely, and being not usually military in their character, form the chief commercial element of the population of Marwar. They differ from their Oswal brethren in not eating anything from the hands of Golas or Nais, and also in abstaining from the use of onion and garlic. On the occasion of marriage, the Oswals observe only four phas at the Chowri, whereas the usual ceremony among the Hindu Mahajans consists of four phas at the Toran and four at the Chowri. Nata or Karewa is strictly prohibited among all the classes of Mahajans.

THE SARAOGIS.

The etymology of the word throws some light on the origin of the clan, which it embraces. It is said to be a contraction of Sara (wine) and augia (abhorance) meaning one, who abhors the use of liquor. According to Mr. Wilson, however, it is a corruption of "Sraook," a lay worshipper of Budha or a Jaina viz. a follower of the Jain religion.

Nem Nath, a Jadu Bansi Raja of Dwarka, it is alleged, was descended from a cousin of Sri Krishna, an incarnation of the Deity. Agarsen, Raja of Junagarh, offered in marriage the hand of his daughter, Rajal De to Nem Nath, and when the latter went to celebrate his nuptials with a grand procession, consisting of the Rajputs of 84 villages, he found, to his utter annoyance, that the ingredients of the liquor, which was being prepared, were most repugnant; the smell had even vitiated the atmosphere—which produced such an effect on the higher sensibilities of his soul that he put off the marriage and from that moment abjured the use of flesh and liquor by embracing Jainism along with his party. It was in this way that the 84 gots (clans) of Mahajans were created after the names of the villages, to which they belonged.

"They have also sects called Terahpanthi and Bispanthi, or followers of 13 and 20, said sometimes to refer to the number of objects which are most essential to salvation. The former clothe their idols, which they worship seated, burn lamps before them, but present no flowers or fresh fruit to them, holding it to be a sin to take away even vegetable life, though they will eat vegetables if anybody will offer them ready cut and prepared for cooking; the latter on the other hand worship standing before naked idols, and refuse to burn lamps before them. Horace Wilson notes that the Bispanthis are said by some to be the orthodox Digambaras, of whom the Terahpanthis are the dissenting branch." In Marwar, however, the Terapanthis have no faith in the Acharajas, while the Bispanthis do.

The Saraogis are very strict in their observances; and carry the reverence for animal life, which is taught by the Hindu and practised by the Buddhist, to an absurd extent. Their women do not wear ivory.

The offerings made by the Saraogis do not consist of flowers or sweets, cooked by the confectioner, but of such things as almonds, cocanuts walnuts, cardimums &c. or anything cooked with extreme caution by their own hands.

The Brahmanas are not allowed to take any part in their weddings in which the "toran" is struck one day before the marriage contrary to the custom of the Hindus, who strike it just before the phas.

They neither perform any kiriya karam (a ceremony which is believed to propitiate the souls of the dead) nor get their heads shaved; but on the third day after the death of the deceased strike one stone against another, saying—Tum Tumhare Ham Hamare meaning to say, that the dead have nothing to do with the living.

The Saraogis immigrated to Marwar from Khandelwal in Jeypur and hence they are some-times known as Khandelwal Saraogis.

Saraogis do not intermarry with Oswals and differ from them on the following points.

- (a)—The Saraogis believe in Digambra while the Oswals have faith in Siwtambra.
- (b)—The chief priest among the latter is Saiwag but among the Saraogis, a priest of their own clan.
- (c)—The Saraogis eat nothing whatever after sunset, but Oswals do not observe such restrictions.
- (d)—The Oswals can partake of food cooked by a Saraogi but Saraogis will not eat what is cooked by an Oswal.
- (e)—The Saraogis, unlike Oswals, burn no fuel without washing it, nor light any lamp at night, because of the great regard, they entertain for the animal life.
- (f)—A Saraogi must first bathe before he can eat anything, the Oswals, however, do not think this absolutely necessary.

THE PORWALS.

The Porwals are said to have been originally the Rajputs of Patan in Gujrat, where they embraced Jainism some 700 years ago. The Rajput clans of Panwar, Rathore, and Solunkhi are still found among them.

The Porwals are found principally as traders, in Jaswantpura, Jalor and Godwar, where they advance loans to the cultivators at exorbitant rates, which are consequently seldom repaid in full. They are a curse to their debtors, being always very strict in their demands, which fact is best illustrated by the following Hindi couplet, chiefly applicable to them—

Bania thari ban koi nar jane nahin.

Pani piye chhan lohi unchhaneo piye.

Meaning O Bania! no body knows your doings. Although you do not drink water without straining and sifting it, but you sip the blood without reserve. Sipping the blood or lohi pina is an expression used in Marwar in the sense of teasing or torturing, which the Porwals are said to practise on a high scale, in the case of their debtors.

A notable fact in connection with the Porwals is that the great majority of them demand a high price for their daughters when given in marriage. They will readily bestow the hand of a young daughter on a wealthy Mahajan of their own clan, howsoever old or worn out with age, he may be, provided a large sum is offered; and consequently it is said that they rejoice most at the birth of a daughter because they consider her "a valuable commodity," to which effect there runs a saying—

Baji thali unre karam ri kali.

Bajio soopro ne huo jhonpro.

i. e. He is an unfortunate man, in whose house the sound of the ringing of a thali (a bronze dish) is heard, but he becomes the owner of a house who hears the resounding of a soopro (a basket used for winnowing corn). It alludes to a well-known custom observed by the Hindus on the birth of a child. If a son is born, the usual ceremony is to ring a thali, but on the birth of a daughter, the intimation is given by rubbing a chhaj or basket.

Among the Porwals a daughter who fetches a sum of Rs. 500 is termed Bakri (she-goat); but one who secures higher price, is called Ghetia (ewe.) If the bride happens to be in the full bloom of her youth, the doting husband has to pay something more, as admission into the house is not allowed, unless and until he pays handsome presents to almost every female relation of his young fiancée. Some of the Porwals, however, are contented with a sum of Rs. 84 only, offered to them as "Beohar" viz. marriage fee. Loans are also contracted among them, with a promise of payment on their daughters' marriage.

The Porwals do not observe mourning like other Hindus. In Jaswant-pura, however, they get themselves shaved and change their dress on the day, the dead is burnt.

Their marriage ceremonies resemble those of the Oswals, with whom they do not, however, intermarry though they can eat together. The Brahmans also attend on the occasion of phas.

The Porwals do not wear pagri or turban, but use a potia or dupatta. One, who does not support himself or who maintains himself on the charity of others, is looked down upon, and often denominated Hindola which no Porwal would like to be called.

THE SRI-MAL.

The Sri-Mal Mahajans regard themselves as an off-shoot of the Sri Mali Brahmans. Their original abode is said to have been Sri-Mal Keshatr viz. Bhin-Mal; but they were converted to Jainism in Gujrat,

Their customs and ceremonies resemble, to a great extent those of the Oswals, with whom although not with Porwals, they can intermarry.

THE SRI-SRI-MAL.

In Marwar they are found in very small numbers but in Gujrat they are said to abound. The only point worth mentioning about them is that at the time of marriage, the bridegroom puts golden rings on the fingers of his brides' foot.

THE MAHESHRI.

The Maheshris like the Oswals also trace Rajput descent chiefly from the Chohan, Parihar, and Solankhi clans. Their number is returned in Marwar at 43,117 (Males 18,760, Females 24,357). "They are," as the Revd. M. A. Sherring says, "opium traders, contractors, bankers, and the like, and their business is generally far from home." In Marwar they are for the most part, followers of Hinduism.

They are called Maheshris because they hold faith in Mahesh or Mahadeo. According to their tradition, their ancestor Sojan, who was the son of Kharak Sén, a Chohan Raja of Khandéla who lived about the ninth century, one day went out on an hunting excursion, accompanied by seventy-two followers. The Rishis in the jungle being disturbed, pronounced imprecations, and the whole party were turned into stone. Their widows implored the Mahadeva or Mahesh who restored them to life.

The Maheshris are divided into seventy-two clans, each being founded by the Raja's followers. They have also 989 sub-divisions called Nakh who intermarry among themselves. The following are the clans of the Maheshris.

(1) Soni	...	(25) Dát	...	(49) Lákhotia	...
(2) Sománi	...	(26) Dága	...	(50) Asála	...
(3) Jákhétia	...	(27) Gatáni	...	(51) Chéchéáni	...
(4) Sodháni	...	(28) Ráthi	...	(52) Mupadhania,	...
(5) Hūrkāt	...	(29) Barla	...	(53) Mūndra	...
(6) Nayāti	...	(30) Darak	...	(54) Chopra	...
(7) Hedá	...	(31) Tosniwal	...	(55) Chandak	...
(8) Karwá	...	(32) Ajmeia	...	(56) Baladwa	...
(9) Kákáni	...	(33) Bhandari	...	(57) Boldi	...
(10) Málū	...	(34) Chhaparwál	...	(58) Būb	...
(11) Sarra	...	(35) Bhadar	...	(59) Bāngar	...
(12) Kahelia	...	(36) Bhútra	...	(60) Mandowara,	...
(13) Gilra	...	(37) Bang	...	(61) Totla	...
(14) Jaju	...	(38) Adal	...	(92) Agiwal	...
(15) Báiti	...	(39) Enani	...	(63) Agsor	...
(16) Bindáda	...	(40) Bhūrarwa	...	(64) Partáni	...
(17) Biháni	...	(41) Bhansali	...	(65) Nanar	...
(18) Bajāj	...	(42) Ladha	...	(66) Nawál	...
(19) Kásat	...	(43) Málwani	...	(67) Pallor	...
(20) Kacholia	...	(44) Sikchi	...	(68) Taparia	...
(21) Kalantri	...	(45) Lahoti	...	(69) Manihár	...
(22) Káláni	...	(46) Gádía	...	(70) Dhūt	...
(23) Jhumar	...	(47) Gagráni	...	(71) Dhupar	...
(24) Kábra	...	(48) Kharkat	...	(72) Modáni	...

The Maheshris abstain from the use of liquor and meat, nor do they eat onions, garlic, or carrots.

Among the Maheshris, the use of an ivory Chura is considered very essential for the bride, though this is hardly the case with the Agarwals. "At a Maheshri marriage ceremony," says the Revd. M. A. Sherring, "when the bridegroom enters the bride's house, her maternal uncle lifting her up carries her in his arms seven times round the bridegroom." The parents of the bride and bridegroom can also eat together among them, but they can not do so among the Agarwals.

On the death of a Maheshri, all the members of his family including sons and grandsons, have to shave their heads, without any restriction, but among the Agarwals, the sons only observe this custom and not the grandsons, provided their fathers are living.

THE AGARWALS.

The Agarwals are also said to have been originally Rajputs, and stand next to the Maheshris in point of numbers. According to the present census their number was returned at 18,517 (Males 6,810, Females 11,701). In Marwar, they are mostly Hindus, very few being followers of Jainism.

They are said to be the descendents of one Agar Sen, and hence called Agarwals. Mr. Elliot derives the name from Agroha on the borders of Haryana which was the original seat of the tribe. According to him as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, "the fact of Agarwal Banias making offerings to Goga Pir, the great saint from the neighbourhood of Agroha bears testimony to the truth of the tradition." In Marwar they date their immigration from the capture of Haryana by Shahab-ud-deen Ghori, which caused their dispersion from that place.

The fable of their origin is that a Raja named Basak had eighteen snake-daughters, whom he desired to marry to the same number of brothers. Agar Sen had seventeen sons. Another son is said to have been produced from the body of the eldest one, and thus the couples were joined. The Agarwals are therefore divided into $17\frac{1}{2}$ clans named after the sons of Agar Sen, the last founding only a half-clan.

The clans as given by the Revd. M. A. Sherring are as follow :—

(1) Garga	...	(7) Mangala	...	(13) Thingala	...
(2) Gobhila	...	(8) Bhadala	...	(14) Tittila	...
(3) Garwala	...	(9) Tingala	...	(15) Nital	...
(4) Batsila	...	(10) Erana	...	(16) Tundala	...
(5) Kasila	...	(11) Tayal	...	(17) Goila & Goina,
(6) Sinhala	...	(12) Terana	...	(17½) Bindala	...

There are two divisions among the Agarwals, viz the Dassa and the Bisa, who cannot intermarry, though they may eat together. Each division has its own sub-clans.

Among all the Mahajan castes, the Agarwals alone profess to have some connection with the throne of Delhi. A man of their clan is said to have once been in the service of a Tunwar Raja of Delhi, who left the empire to him when he went on pilgrimage. Other members of the Agarwal community also wanted to join him in occupying the throne, pleading that no distinction of any kind should be observed among the caste-fellows. Nine persons were at last selected who conjointly conducted the state affairs, each putting his leg on the throne. This led to the fall of the empire, and the Chohans obtained possession of the kingdom. In corroboration of the above fact there runs a saying—mung, moth men kon barala.

Agarwala, sab Thukrala.

i. e. All the Agarwals are Thakars or great men, there being no distinction of large or small in heaps of grains.

The custom among the Agarwals of Marwar of keeping an umbrella in the form of chhatar or canopy over the head of the bridegroom is also connected with the above tradition.

The Agarwals are exclusively traders chiefly in English imported goods, but the Agarwal family of Narnoul-Singhis, who devote themselves to Raj service, form an exception, reckoning themselves among the mutسادis. They are not pleased at being styled Banias, which word they apply only to shopkeepers.

The marriage ceremonies among the Agarwals generally resemble those of other Mahajan castes, the chief local peculiarities in Marwar being that the bride at her marriage, puts on white clothes, and the wearing of a garland of seven round silver pieces forms the chief requisite at the time of pheras.

Parījan forms an important ceremony among the Agarwals and is observed on the birth of a first child, when the usual marriage ceremonies are repeated. The family priest recites the sacred mantras and the parents of the newly born child make three rounds or pheras, after which the ears of the child are bored, and then the relations are fed.

Among the Agarwals a follower of Viṣṇu can marry a woman devoted to Jainism, but the offspring of the couple is always regarded as belonging to the religion of his father.

The Fatehpurias, a branch of the Agarwals are said to be the notorious smugglers of customs duties and are generally represented as a quarrelsome class of Mahajans. But they are, at the same time, very enterprising and are found in almost all the cantonments and other far off places under the name of Marwaris. They belong to Fatehpore in Shekhawati, and the following saying is current in Marwar about them.

Lave khand batadē mushti.

Hasil re bilian kheli kushiti,

Ayo Mahajan Fatehpurio.

meaning to say, that he brings superior (white) kind of sugar, but pretends it to be inferior (red), and is prepared to fight when asked to pay customs dues. Thus comes the Fatehpuria Mahajan.

THE BIJA-BARGI.

The Bija-Bargis are sellers of drugs and perfumes. They are also known by the name of Gandhi which is derived from Gandha, smell or perfume. They are said to have come to Marwar from Ranthambor in Jey-pore, and are divided into several clans, viz: the Parwa, the Khotcha, the Nayakwan, the Sidwan &c. and they all intermarry. They are mostly Shivites, very few among them worshipping Vishnu.

The chief ceremony of betrothal among the Bija-Bargis consists in the offer of some jewelry to the bride by the bridegrooms' relations.

The Bija-Bargis are said to be generally very cunning and deceitful, as a saying runs—

Bija-Bargi Baneo-Dujo Gujar-Gour.

Tijo mile jo Daima—Kare tapro chor.

i. e. if in a place a Bija-Bargi, a Gujar-Gour and a Daima combine together, they are sure to bring every thing to chaos.

THE SUNGA.

The Sungas also reckon themselves among the twelve and half Niats of the Mahajans, although their social position is somewhat low. They are really Khundelwal Mahajans, and are said to have come into Marwar from Khundela in Jeypore. They are the distillers of spirits, and in Malani, they style themselves first class traders. They are also known as Seths. Although they sell spirits, they never drink it, which distinguishes them from the Kalals. They are called Sūnga, because they can test the quality of liquor by smelling it. They are the followers of Shiva, and do not eat flesh.

Their marriage ceremonies comprise seven phas as is usual with the Hindu Mahajans. On the marriage day, however, the bridegroom goes to the bride's house, strikes the toran and then returns to his home, where he takes a bath and proceeds again to complete the ceremony of phas. Widows are not permitted to remarry.

The Sūngas are divided into 22½ clans, among whom they intermarry. The chief clans found in Marwar are—(1) the Dantarwal, (2) the Nagori, (3) the Mota, (3) the Bādéra, (5) the Bhurtawat, (6) the Sawalakha, (7) the Khator, and (8) the Kakar.

Since the introduction of the Abkari system in Marwar, the Sungas are by degrees, abandoning their hereditary occupation, and taking principally to cultivation.

THE BOHRAS.

The Bohras stand lowest in point of numbers in the commercial class, and a fortiore in the group of Traders, of whom they form only a four-hundredth part, having numbered 198 (males 110, females 98) at the present Census.

They are chiefly found in Jodhpore, Pali, Jaswantpura and Badgaon, where they carry on trade and deal in "sundries." They appear as money-lenders also—a profession, strictly prohibited by the religion of the Prophet.

The Bohras of Marwar trace their lineage to the two Arabs, Ahmad and Abdulla, who left their country, some 1,400 years back, with the avowed object of diffusing the Mohamedan faith throughout India; but Mr. Ibbetson seems to be of opinion that the word is derived from Beohar (trade). "The word," he says "is used in the general sense in the south of Rajputana and in Gujrat; it is especially applied to a class of Shiah traders, who were converted to Islam some 600 years ago."

The Bohras in Marwar, however, emigrated from Sedpura (Gujrat) and from the peculiarity of speech, which retains some Gujrati characteristics and from the form of dress, which they preserve, they can be easily recognised. Like Bomboids they keep their account books in Gujrati and put a suffix of "Ji" or "Bhoy" after their names.

A Bohra would neither join a Sunni in prayer nor go to Mecca on pilgrimage; his place of pilgrimage being Karbla, which is held sacred as the burial place of Imam Hussain. In India, however, their chief shrines are at Ahmedabad, Ujjain, and Gulia-kot, of which the last is considered to be the "holiest of the holy."

Sir John Malcom gives the following account of the Bohras, which may not be out of place, here.

"In the larger cities of Central India there are many of that mercantile tribe of Mohamedans called Bohras. These engage in every species of commerce. They are wholesale merchants of the first class, as well as pedlars; and sometimes both characters are to be found in the same person. The Bohras who come from the sea-coast of Gujrat into Central India, have imported the improvements of European settlements, even in the construction of their houses and furniture: they are the chief medium through whom the trade in European articles is carried on; and in every town in which they settle, they form a distinct colony. They are united under the spiritual rule of their elected Moollahs, or Priests, to whose orders, in conformity with the ancient precepts of the remarkable sect of Mohamedans to which they belong, they render implicit obedience. The good understanding in which they live with each other strengthens their association; and though they have at times suffered from the violence of power, few of the industrious classes have escaped so well, during the worst of times, as the Bohras."

PEDLARS!

THE BISATI.

Under the pedlars come the Bisatis who deal in petty hardwares. The name apparently seems to be derived from the Arabic Bisat meaning a carpet, and is applied to those who keep no shops, but are found with their goods spread out for sale on a mat before them. Sir Henry Elliot, however, regards this derivation as incorrect, and derives the word from the Hindi Bisat which means capital or stock.

The Bisatis are also styled in Marwar, Bohparis, and the goods they deal in are known as mal-manihari. They are mostly Sayads, and belong to the Sunni sect. The manufactures of saltpetre and soap as well as the Kharadis and the Churigar also belong to this class. The Bisatis are said to have first come into Marwar at Nagore from Delhi. Their chief subdivisions as found in Marwar are—the Bukhari, the Esari, the Belim, the Molana, and the Sheikh-Qureshi. Betrothal is confirmed among them by putting a bridegroom's ring on the brides' finger, and by giving her some sugar and cocoanuts. The ceremonies of Nikah (marriage) are the same as among other Musalmans. The women are generally kept in seclusion, but Nata is permitted. This however, forms an exception with the Didwana Bisatis who do not allow widow-marriage. Adoptions are made among them in the absence of male issue; the daughters being excluded from inheriting property.

CARRIERS!

In this group are included the Bâldias, and the Lohanas, whose occupation is to carry merchandise. Their numbers as returned in the present census are:—

			Males.	Females.	Total.
Bâldia	3,217	1,529	4,746
Lohana	433	388	821
Total	3,650	1,917	5,567

THE BALDIA.

The Bâldias, as the name from balad a bullock, signifies carry on trade by means of bullocks. They are also known by the name of Banjaras. They have no settled homes, but lead a wandering life in parties, each being under a leader called Naik. Their camp, comprising a large number of followers with their laden bullocks, is generally known as Tanda. Their chief weapon consists of a stick called Katal with which they strike in the leg, any body who attacks them or prevents their cattle from grazing in the fields.

Prior to the extension of Railways they formed a very useful class of traders, their carryings consisting chiefly of salt, rice, turmeric &c. They used a kettle-drum in their camps to give the signal for marching and halting like the Arabian caravans.

"They are," says Sir Henry Elliot, distinguished for the honesty of their mercantile transactions, and their credit is considerable. They usually take advances from a native merchant to purchase the goods they require, and repay him by a bill from the market where they are disposed of."

The Báldias include various sections of castes among them. Those found in Marwar are divided into separate communities each comprising one or more tribes in the following order.

- (1) Rajputs—(Gour, Rathore, Daima) and Birm-Bhats.
- (2) Bágora Bhats.
- (3) Māru Bhats.
- (4) Kàchhēla Charans.
- (5) Mārū Charans.
- (6) Jāts.
- (7) Lohānas.
- (8) Gawáriás and Gujar-Gawárs.
- (9) Multani Musalmáns.

They are said to intermarry among their own community without any distinction of caste. They eat flesh and drink liquor. Their dead bodies are burnt.

The system of Panchayat is much adhered to by the Baldias. They are not given to litigation and usually get their disputes settled by the elderly members of their community. The Panches generally take their seats in a circle and the parties concerned come before them and throw their sticks on the ground which implies implicit compliance with the Panches' decisions. Any one not obeying their orders is punished by expulsion from the community.

THE LOHANA.

The Lohanas or the Loyanas as they are often called, abound in the Districts of Pachbhadra, Mallani and Sanchores. Like the Baldias, they also used to keep large numbers of camels which could be hired to carry merchandise and made use of kettle-drums. But Railways have likewise destroyed their trade, and they have mostly taken to cultivation or become shop-keepers. Their clans found in Marwar are the Bhati, the Majita, and the Kutka.

The Lohanas of Marwar mostly follow the customs and manners of the Khatris, with whom they can marry and eat. They eat flesh and drink liquor, but they differ from their Sindhi brethern in abstaining from fish.

They are principally Vishnuites, and their dead bodies are burnt, but those following the Ai-Mata of Bilara, bury their dead.

Widow marriage is recognised among them, but if a widow contracts Nata with a man prohibited by her relations, the Panchayat inflicts a fine which is divided into four parts and shared by the Panches of Balotra, Jesol, Disa and Ahmedabad, at which places there are permanent Lohana Panchayats, and the fines thus raised form a regularly kept fund.

The Lohanas are generally of strong physique and courageous. A large number of them with their camels is said to have accompanied the Commissariat of the Imperial Forces during the last Kabul campaigns.

CHAPTER—V.

CLASS D. ARTIZANS AND VILLAGE MENIALS.

The total figures returned under this head are 725,032 (Males 379,090 Females 345,942,) comprising more than one-fourth of the whole population of Marwar. This class exceeds in number all the other classes with the exception of the Agriculturists who stand first in the list. It includes several groups of artisans who form a large proportion of the population, and enjoy a monopoly of the whole industries of the country. The Leather-workers make up the largest group. Next to it come the Shepherds and Wool-weavers, and then the other Artizans and village-menials. We shall however, deal with each group separately as returned in the Census Tables.

GOLDSMITHS.

THE SUNAR.

The Sunars are the workers in gold and silver, and are also known by the name of Soni. In Marwar they number 23,212—Males 11,802 and Females 11,410—and declare Bhinnmal to have been their original abode. There are two divisions of them, viz. (1) the Mer-Sunars, and (2) the Bamania-Sunars. They do not intermarry or eat and drink together.

The Mer Sunars allege that their ancestor named Siksu was produced by their Kuldevi or family goddess, Bāgēshuri from the dirt of her body in order to destroy a demon named Kankasur. They profess Shaktism, but many among them are followers of Aiji and bury their dead. The Bamania-Sunars chiefly include the Rajput and Brahman element among them who subsequently adopted the profession of goldsmith, and they mostly worship Vishnu.

The Sunars, on the whole, as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, pride themselves on being twice born, and many of them wear the Jeneo or sacred thread; but according to the Revd. Mr. Sherring they properly belong to the great family of the Vaisias. In Marwar they chiefly follow the customs of the Oswal Mahajans with whom they formerly intermarried. In their marriages, they are also now allowed to perform the ceremony of striking the toran on horse-back which they were prohibited to do by the Oswals, and which gave rise to a great many disputes in the Raj Courts. They are said to have a dialect of their own which is not easily understood by a foreigner. They abstain from the use of liquor and meat. Widow marriage is recognised among them.

Among the people of Marwar who believe in superstition, the sudden appearance of a Sunar on the road is considered as foreboding evil consequences, and the bad omen is generally guarded against by making a halt in the way. The saying current in Marwar runs as follows:—

Ata, Bhaia, Ghi-ghara, khulan kesan Nar.

Dave bhala na jivna Liali, Jarakh, Sunar.

i. e. if flour, a stone or a pot of ghi is brought, or if a woman with loose hairs, or a wolf, a Jarakh or a Súnar pass either on the left or right, it is not a good omen.

The Sunars have several sub-divisions. The following are the clans of the Mēr Sunars.

(1) Soliwal	(8) Māshen
(2) Tūngar	(9) Ludr
(3) Karél	(10) Surriā
(4) Agrúya	(11) Jowra
(5) Jāngalwa	(12) Dewāl
(6) Dānwar	(13) Rora
(7) Dhūpar

The Bamania Sunars are divided as under—

(1) Kala	(8) Khator
(2) Bādmera	(9) Mahecha...	...
(3) Jasmatia	(10) Jālora
(4) Bucha	(11) Mundora...	...
(5) Chitora	(12) Lādanwāl	...
(6) Mathuria...	...	(13) Katta
(7) Hérao

B A R B E R S.

T H E N A I .

The number of Nāis or barber caste was returned in Marwar at 1467 (Males 777, Females 690). They are Hindus and Musalmans. The latter are called Hajjam or Khalifa, but they are very rare in Marwar.

The Nāis form a very useful class of personal attendants, and as Sir Henry Elliot remarks, are of more consequence among the close-shaven Hindus than the bearded Musalmans. The Nai's occupation is not confined merely to the shaving of heads, but he plays the most important part in Hindu society next to a Brahman. The mere appearance of a Nāi is considered a good omen among superstitious people, as a Marwari proverb says—

Nai samo awto—Darpan liyan hath Sukan bicharo panthia—Sampat aye sath.

i. e. If you meet a barber, with a mirror in his hand, consider it, O! traveller an omen, which prosperity will accompany.

The following extract from the Revd. M. A. Sherrings' writings will explain the far wider sphere of his duties—

“At a marriage feast, and also at other festivals, the Nāi is commissioned to visit the persons who are to be invited and to solicit their attendance. When all are assembled, the Nāi is present to hand the guests water or pawn or the hookah, as they may desire. When the feast is over, the Nāi removes the food that remains. The Nāi is also sometimes employed as a go-between in making arrangements for marriages between parties and in seeking out for a youth a suitable girl to be his bride. On occasion of a funeral, he shaves the head of the living, and invites friends and relations to the funeral.”

In Marwar there are three divisions of Nàis, viz: (1) the Maru-Nài, (2) the Baid-Nài and (3) the Purbia Nài. Their common profession is shaving, but they form three separate communities and do not intermarry. Each community is sub-divided into several clans, bearing the names, of Raj-pnts from whom they trace their descent. The Maru-Nàis, as the name implies, belong particularly to Marwar. They claim a superior position, and do not clean vessels in which food is eaten, as the Baid-Nais do, who also practise surgery, and whose females attend other women at child-birth, in the capacity of nurses or Dais. The Purbia-Nàis appear to have immigrated from Northern-India but they soon became intermixed with their Marwari brethren by adopting their manners and customs.

The Nàis generally worship Sen-Bhagat, a saint of their own caste, and regard his oath as a most solemn adjuration. They eat flesh and drink liquor. They address each other by the name of Thakur, as runs a proverb Nai ki barat men Thakur hi Thakur—i. e. "In a marriage procession of Nàis are all Thakur." They are also known by the title of Khawas, especially those employed in shampooing people. Nāpat is a word of abuse among them.

Notwithstanding their usefulness, the Nàis are regarded as a low caste simply on account of the uncleanness of their profession as a proverb runs—

Nai, Dai, Baid, Kasai.
Inka sutak kabhi nahin jai.

i. e. "Nàis or barbers, Dàis or nurses, Baidis or physicians and Kasais or butchers can never be got clean." It is only for this reason that Brahmans and high caste Mahajans refrain from drinking water from their hands, and usually take a bath after shaving.

The Nàis have the reputation also of being very cunning and shrewd—Nai bat gawai is a common saying current in Marwar, meaning that they are little to be trusted, especially those who act as intermediaries in matters of marriage and betrothals. Another saying to the same effect runs thus—

Nar men Nai, pakheru men Kag.
Pani men ka Mendka tino dagabaz.

i. e. "the Nàis among men, the crows among birds and frogs among amphibious animals are remarkable for their astuteness."

In Marwar the Nàis are not allowed admission into the fort of Siwana, as they are said to have formed an intrigue with Mota Raja Udey Singh against his nephew, Kalla Rai to obtain possession of the fort.

BLACK-SMITHS.

THE LOHAR.

The Lohars as their name implies are the black-smiths who work in iron or loha: They comprise Hindus as well as Musalmans, and in Marwar their number was returned as follows—

Hindu Lohars	...	8,000	7,150	15,150
Musalman Lohars	...	1,293	1,157	2,450
Total	...	9,293	8307	17,600

Sir Henry Elliot describes them as the descendant of a Kùrmi by a concubine caste unknown, whereas the Revd. M. A., Sherring regards them as popularly considered to be descended from the Rishi, or ancient sage, Viskarma. In Marwar they are, however, composed of several Rajput tribes who became separated from the original stock by the speciality of their trade. They have two divisions viz. (1) the Gadia and (2) the Malwia.

The Gadia Lohars are the wandaring black-smiths who have no fixed homes, but travel about as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, with their families and implements in carts from village to village. They declare Chitor to be their original home from which place they are said to have dispersed after its capture by the Musalman invaders. They do not do work of a fine description and are called Gadia from the gadi or cart which they always keep with them and never leave even if they remain stationary for a short time in which case they usually place a reversed charpai over their cart. They are Vishnuites, but many also worship Ramdeoiji, and take liquor and meat. They practise nata, but do not marry with the Malvias. In Marwar slang, persons who are in the habit of keeping their families with them are spoken of in joke as Gadia Lohars.

The Malwia Lohars assert that they originally came into Marwar from Malwa. They form a separate section, and do not permit family alliances with the Gadias. They also work as carpenters and are generally very clever artizans. They worship Shakti, but many among them are the followers of Aiji and burry their dead.

The Lohars rank as a low class, and are generally regarded as forming an impure caste, probably because as Mr. Ibbetson notes, they work in black which is a colour of evil omen, or because they use bellows made of cow-hide for which reason according to Mr. Colebrooke they are classed in the Purans as one of the polluted tribes.

The Musalman Lohars include several clans of converted Rajputs and belong to the Sunni sect, though to all appearance they seem to be Hindus, especially their women, who resemble them both in dress and dialect. Like their Hindu brethren, they are divided into two sections called (1) the Multani, and (2) the Nagori, who intermarry and also practise nata. Both sections have their sub-divisions, mostly bearing Rajput names.

The Multani Lohars are said to have come from Multan, and are regarded as very excellent artizans in Jodhpore, Nagore, Pali and Kuchawan, where they execute very fine work.

The females of a clan among the Nagori Lohars, called Jindrana never wear a chura unless it is granted to them by the Raj.

CARPENTERS AND TURNERS.

This group comprises the following castes—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Kharadi	...	138	382	520
Lakhera	...	1,451	1,338	2,789
Churigar	...	186	81	267
Khati	...	26,958	22,515	49,473
Total	...	28,733	24,316	53,049

In Marwar, the Kharadis and Churigars are Musalmans, and the Khatis, Hindus. The Lakheras are both Hindus and Musalmans. The Musalman Lakheras are also known by the name of Manihar or Shishgar.

THE KHARADI.

The Kharadis are turners, the word being derived from Kharad, a turner's lathe. They work also as carpenters, and excel chiefly in manufacturing wooden toys. Some among them are very excellent artizans in Jodhpore, Nagore and Bagri.

They belong to the Sunni sect and comprise among them numbers many Shekh and Sayads. They also include some converted Rajputs, whose sub-divisions still bear Rajput names. Their dialect is a mixture of Urdu and Marwari, and they follow the customs prevailing among the Desi-Musalmans. They abstain from the use of liquor and pork. Their women observe parda, but nata is allowed among them. They work with their husbands and paint or colour the articles made by the latter. They also occupy themselves in binding scarves for the purpose of dyeing.

THE LAKHERA.

The Lakheras are the bangle-makers and dealers in lac or sealing wax. They are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The Hindu Lakheras number 806 males and 767 females, and have two sub-divisions, viz. (1) the Hataria, and (2) the Raj-Kuli. The Hatarias claim an unmixed descent, and allege a mythological origin. They say that when Parvati decorated herself with various ornaments, she was annoyed to see her hands naked. Mahadeva immediately created a man, who made lac bangles for his consort. They are called Hatarias, either because they prepared ornaments for the hand or because they were produced from the hand of Mahadeva. They have no sub-divisions among them.

The Raj-Kulis trace their descent from some degraded Rajputs who adopted the profession of bangle-makers when Parasu Ram destroyed the Kshatriyas. Their sub-divisions still bear Rajput names, and they worship the same deities as they originally did.

Both the Hatarias and the Raj-Kulis intermarry, and can eat or drink every thing without any great caste prejudice. Their women work with them, and visit the Zenanas of great men to supply bangles when required, in which case they receive some thing extra in the shape of grain, which is known as Akha (reward) in addition to the price fixed. The Lakhera women never wear ivory or glass Churas but always use lac bangles. They also do not get their nose bored like other Hindu women.

The Lakheras are very rarely rich, and are generally found superstitiously contented with their present condition. They believe that at the time their ancestor made bangles for Parvati, the consort of Mahadeva, he was given some pearls as a reward or akha, but he sold them to a Mahajan. When the goddess came to know the fact, she cursed the Lakhera, that as he had lost the gift which the Mahajans would henceforth enjoy, his descendants should always lead a life of poverty.

The Musalman Lakheras who number 645 males and 571 females follow the same profession as their Hindu brethren, and include among them several tribes of converted Rajputs belonging to the Sunni sect. The Lakheras, as their name implies, work only in lac. Those working in glass are generally known by the name of Shishgar, Kachéra or Manihár. In addition to the figures given above for Musalman Lakheras, 102 males and 89 females, have, separately returned themselves from Jodhpore and Nagore, as Manihars under Glass-workers, but they belong to the same stock and intermarry with the Lakheras. Nata is also practised among them.

THE CHURIGAR.

The Churigars are the makers of ivory bracelets in Marwar. They do not make lac or glass bangles, but confine themselves to the manufacture of ivory chura, and they thus form a separate caste from that of the Lakherras or Manihars who work in lac or glass, and with whom the Churigars do not marry. They are Sunnis, and declare themselves to be Sayads, but are called Churigars from the occupation they follow. They observe the same customs as other Desi-Musalmans in Marwar, some of their ceremonies resembling those of the Kharadis. Nata is not allowed among them.

The Churigars are very excellent workers in ivory. In Marwar their fan handles and boxes for holding lamp-black have a wide renown. They also make things of cocoanut, but chiefly pride themselves on a speciality known as Bagh-Bari in which they are said to have even once excelled the greatest work-men of Delhi.

The use of ivory chura is very common in Marwar, and as the Revd. M. A. Sherring, says "a custom prevails among the Hindu-women of decorating themselves with these ornaments at a certain season of the year. The bangles worn at the wrist are generally known as Muthia, whereas those used on the arms are called chura."

THE KHATI.

Khati is a common term in Marwar for a carpenter, and seems to be derived from Kath meaning wood. He is the same as the Barahi of the North-Western Provinces or the Turkhan of the Panjab. In the District of Godwar, he is, however, known as Sūthar, and in Jalor he is called Bināik.

The Khatis trace their descent from Viskarma, and regard his oath as a most solemn adjuration. They declare Eloregurh in the Deccan to have been their original home.

The Khatis of Marwar are said to be a composite class, including various sections of Rajput origin. They are divided into 120 clans or Gotras, called chiefly after the names of their founders or those of the villages they originally belonged to. They belong mostly to the Jakhra clan, worshipping Sawatri as their Kūldēvi or family deity. There are found other clans, among them such as the Meywara, the Purbia, the Dhulla, &c. but they observe no distinction, and intermarry with them. Widow-marriage is age permitted.

Among the Khatis, those who wear the sacred thread or Jenco, and abstain from the use of liquor and meat, are known as Bamania-Khatis, and they regard themselves as superior to the rest. Some of them work also as black-smiths, and are distinguished by the name of Khati-Lohars.

They form a very useful class of artisans. Many among them are said to be very clever and intelligent workmen, but the majority however, pass their lives as village carpenters. They are not allowed in Marwar to use a saw more than two and a half feet long, without the special permission of the Darbar.

The Khátis seem to be greatly attached to the Hinjras, or eunuchs, and it is a fact that in Marwar, the latter generally put up with the Khátis when they go into the country. The reason of this is stated to be that once on occasion of a severe famine, scarcity compelled the Hinjras to leave their homes; and as a last resource, they resolved to give up their lives on the "Mountain of Snow." But they received support from the Khatis, who also fixed certain lags which the Hinjras still continue to receive from them, on occasions of births and marriages.

BRASS AND COPPER-SMITHS.

THE KASÉRA.

The Kaséras work in brass, copper and other metals with the exception of iron and tin. The figures returned for them are 1,234 males and 1163 females, of whom 110 males and 91 females are Musalmans.

Like other artisans, the Kaséras claim descent from the Rajputs. Sir Henry Elliot, calls them Kasbhara from Kasa, bell metal and bharna, to fill, and describes them as forming one of the sub-divisions of the Sunars. In Marwar, too, they follow most of the customs of the Bamania-Sunars.

Properly speaking, the Kaséras are workers in Kasa. Those working in brass are called Thathéras, whereas those employed in smelting metals or casting moulds for vessels are known as Bharawas. They do not, however, form distinct castes in Marwar, but all belong to the same class, and intermarry with each other, although 157 males and 141 females have returned themselves separately as Bharawas. In the Panjab, as well as in Benares, they are stated as living entirely apart, not intermarrying with each other. According to Mr. Ibbetson, "the Thathera is the man who sells, as the Kaseras are the men who make vessels of copper, brass, and other mixed metals." The Revd. Mr. Sherring says, "Thatheras are distinct from the Kaseras, although to some extent they labour in the same metals. Yet their work is of a heavier and rougher cast, and embraces iron, tin, and zinc as well as brass, copper, and Kasa. They also carve the vessels manufactured by the Kaseras." "The Bharawa caste," he further says, "is especially engaged in the occupation of preparing moulds of various shapes and kinds for casting vessels."

The Kaséras worship Shakti, and wear the sacred thread, especially on the occasion of their marriage. In their niat or feast they also distribute Dachhina (rewards to Brahmans) among their caste people like the Pushkarna Brahmans. In cases of adoption, the usual ceremony of pagri-bandhna is performed; if a near relation is adopted, only one turban is supplied to him by the family of the adoptive father, but if a remote kinsman is taken each member of the family has to furnish a turban separately.

The Revd. Mr Sherring describes them as occupying a high position, even holding a place above the Vaisya or commercial caste, but this is not the case in Marwar, where they rank on a par with the other artizan castes. Widows are allowed to marry again.

TAILORS.

THE DARZI.

Darzis or tailors were returned in Marwar at 16,956—Males 8,833 Females 8,123. Mr. Ibbetson regards the term Darzi as purely occupational. In Marwar the Darzis are all Hindus, generally to be distinguished by the needles in their turbans. They are divided into two sections—(1) the Pipa-Bansi, and (2) the Namdeo-Bansi.

The Pipa-Bansis take their name from Pipaji, a Khichi Rajput who is said to have abandoned the secular world about the Samvat year 1,475 and to have induced his Rajput servants and followers to adopt the profession of tailors. They are also known as Maru-Darzis. The Rajput clans chiefly found among them are—Parihar, Punwar, Chohan, Solankhi, Tunwar, Sisodia, Dábi, Bháti, Dakécha, Táki, Daiya, Sinkhlicha, Makwán, Kachhwaha, and Ghelot.

The Namdeo-Bansis are the followers of Namdeo, who was a saint of the Táki clan. They declare themselves to have been originally Rajputs, who adopted the profession of Chhipas or makers of chintz and other fabrics at the time of Parasu Ram, but subsequently became Darzis. They are distinguished by the name of Chhipa-Darzis, and some of their members still work as dyers.

The Pipa-Bansis and the Namdeo-Bansis do not intermarry although they may eat or smoke together. Both sections allow nata of their widows. The Namdeo-Bansi women do not wear neori or other ornaments on their legs which cause a ringing sound.

The cowardness of Darzis is proverbial, and in Marwar a person wanting in zeal or courage is generally called a Darzi. The following story current in Jodhpore serves to illustrate their character in this respect. It is said that some Darzi women of Jodhpore were once looted at Pál, a village about 8 miles from Jodhpore. The Darzis being bent upon revenge, marched against the village, but reaching the place at night, they postponed their intended attack till the dawn of day. At the same time, every one desired to remain behind the other, and in this way, they all arrived one by one, near the gate of Jodhpore city when the time came for the proposed attack. The expression—Darzion ki Pal marna has thus passed into a saying, and is applied to those who undertake deeds which they are incapable of accomplishing.

The Darzis never take a Nai or barber in their marriage processions. A Nai is said to have once accompanied a Darzi marriage party. But as he alone was on foot, he pretended to be ill, and was carried by the Darzis on their shoulders, and became thus a great nuisance to them. From that time, the Darzis are said to have dispensed with the services of a Nai, but the saying Chhate-Darzi Nai pala nahin jawe (meaning as long as there are Darzis, a Nai has not to walk on foot) has become a general proverb.

DYERS AND WEAVERS.

This group comprises several castes connected more or less in their calling. The figures returned for them respectively in the present census were as follow—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Chhipa	...	3,229	3,009	6,238
Rangrez	...	2,256	2,328	4,584
Bandhara	...	265	179	444
Patwa	...	974	853	1,827
Julaha	...	494	423	927
Koli	...	838	762	1,600
Total		8,056	7,564	15,620

The Patwa, as will be seen further on, is merely the name of an occupation, and does not form any separate caste. The Kolis, on the other hand, do not follow the occupation of weavers, in Marwar, but work as Coolis or menials, the Bhambis generally taking their place as the local cloth-weavers.

THE CHHIPAS.

The Chhipas form a distinct caste who employ themselves in printing and stamping chintz or other cotton cloths, and are said to have originally come from Pindarpore in the Deccan. They are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The Hindu Chhipas number 2,025 males and 1822 females and include members of the Rajput clans, who adopted this profession in times of trouble. Some of them also work as tailors.

There are generally speaking two divisions of the Chhipas—viz. (1) the Bamdeo-Bansi, and (2) the Namdeo-Bansi—so called after the names of the two eminent saints who respectively founded them. Each division has twelve sub-clans.

Namdeo is said to have been a wonderful man who saved a large number of his followers by performing several miracles before the Mughal Emperor, Aurangzeb, when the latter enforced his bigotted policy of converting the Hindus. Namdeo had two chief disciples—Tikam and Gobind—whose followers are called Ták and Gola respectively. The Chhipas of Marwar, for the most part, belong to these two clans. They may both eat together, but cannot form matrimonial alliances with each other. Nata is allowed among them. The Ták Chhipas have to pay Rs. 100 as the nata fee, but among the Golas, this payment seldom exceeds Rs. 20.

The Chhipas worship Vishnu, and follow the customs of the Mahajans. The Gola Chhipas, however, do not abserve any funeral ceremony on the third, ninth and twelveth days after the death of a deceased, as is usual with the Hindus.

The Ták Chhipas have the following sub-divisions—

(1) Nathia	...	(5) Untwar	...
(2) Rundwal	...	(6) Minda	...
(3) Goslia	...	(7) Ludar	...
(4) Sarwa	...	(8) Nagi	...

The following are the sub-clans of the Golas—

(1) Bhati, (2) Chohan, (3) Parihar, (4) Solankhi, (5) Ghelot, (6) Punwar.

The number of Musalman Chhipas in Marwar was returned at 1,204 males and 1,127 females. They follow the same calling as the Hindu Chhipas, and also comprise several tribes of converted Rajputs who are said long ago, to have adopted the profession of dyers. They form a distinct caste from that of the Rangrez, and do not marry with the latter. They are Sunnis. Their ceremony of betrothal consists in the offer of a Hunsli (a silver neck ornament) to the bride, Nata is practised when the verses of Nikah are again recited.

THE RANGREZ.

The Rangrez called also Nilgars in Marwar are the dyers. The word is derived from rang colour and rez a worker. They dye chiefly in madder and indigo. They date the commencement of their profession from the time of Shahab-ud-din Ghori, and declare that they came into Marwar from Delhi. They are all Sunni Musalmans, and form a distinct community of their own, not intermarrying either with the Chhipas or the Charohas, though they all pursue the same calling. The chief sub-divisions of the Rangrez are the Chohans, the Khichi, the Khokar, and the Behlim, who marry among themselves.

The ceremonies of marriage among the Rangrez are just like those of the Desi Musalmans. The marriage day is appointed by the parents of the bride, and an intimation of the date is given, some days before, to the bridegroom's party, by sending a thread tied round a cocoanut, and containing as many knots as there are days intervening. The bridegroom unties one knot every day, and on the last day, the party arrives at the bride's house, when the marriage is performed.

The women of the Rangrez work with them. Their usual dress consists of trousers, but when they go out, they usually wear a gown over them locally known as Tilak.

The Charohas form another class of dyers, but they are quite distinct from the Rangrez. They declare Multan to have been their original home, where they also work as Dhobis or washermen. They work like the Bandharas, and tie scarves for dyeing in various colours. They recognize widow marriage, but do not marry with the Rangrez.

The following are their sub-divisions.

(1) Gharila	...	(8) Thagri	...
(2) Dhera	...	(9) Motha	...
(3) Bambar	...	(10) Gulattar	...
(4) Sampal	...	(11) Janva	...
(5) Sattar	...	(12) Jhakkal	...
(6) Bhatti	...	(13) Marothi	...
(7) Sonara	...

THE BANDHARA.

The Bandharas are the printers of scarves, who tie pieces of cloth for the purpose of dyeing them in a variety of colours. They are said to have been originally Nāgar Brahmans who incurred the displeasure of Raja Janmeja of Hastinapore by refusing to receive the alms he gave them. The Raja ordered their sacred threads or Jeneas to be taken off, and that they should be put to slaughter. The Brahmans thereupon sought protection of Sawanda Mata, to whom they offered a Chunri or cloth dyed in various colours. They are called Bandharas, because they adopted the profession of dyeing cloths in a peculiar way by tying them in different parts. In Marwar, many Khattris pursue the same calling, also Musalman dyers called Charohas.

The Bandharas abound in Jalore, Jaswantpura and Sanchore. They are Vishnuites, and worship Sawanda Mata as their Kuldevi or family deity. They marry among their own caste, and recognize widow marriage. The payments made to the parents of the bride, on occasions of betrothal and marriage amount to Rs. 91 and Rs. 32 respectively, but nothing is paid in cases in which Ata-sata marriages take place, i. e. when each party gives a daughter in marriage to the other. Widows are married to distant relations, avoiding only the four Gotras of her late husband. But a man marrying a widow has to pay to her parents, a sum of Rs. 42, besides giving a daughter in marriage to that family. The girl thus given in marriage is called Satu-chohokri.

The Bandharas are divided into nine Gotras as follow—

(1) Chandali	...	(6) Adéta	...
(2) Phulia	...	(7) Kongaria	...
(3) Lahora	...	(8) Tarsingia	...
(4) Apola	...	(9) Gawaria	...
(5) Bagéla	...

THE PATWA.

The Patwas, from Pat meaning silk, are the braidiers. They make silken cord and waistbands, thread beads on silk, and so forth. In Marwar they do not form a distinct caste, the name being merely an occupational term. Brahmans and Mahajans often work as Patwas, but they retain their respective castes. These must not, however, be confounded with a clan of the same name among the Mahajans, who chiefly follow trade, and who form a very influential community in Jeysulmere.

In Benares, the Patwas are said to engage in the manufacture and sale of ornaments made of zinc and tin. In Behar, they also employ themselves in weaving silken cloth.

THE JULAHAS.

The Julahas in Marwar are Musalmans and cloth weavers. They are sometimes called Momin, because they observe their prayers and fast very strictly. They claim a purely original extraction, and declare that they entered India with Khwaja Sahab of Ajmere, and from Ajmere they migrated to Sambhar, Didwana, and other places in Marwar. They belonged to the Behlim and Qureshi clans. Subsequently, however, several out-caste Rajputs joined their profession, who are known as Ghoris from having been converted to Mohamedanism by Shahab-ud-din. They generally weave country cloth called Reza and Susi, but the Julahas of Jodhpore and Nagore, are said to be unusually skilful and accustomed to weave fine turbans.

The Julahas of Nagore were formerly noted for practising necromancy and good many stories of their miraculous performances are current in Marwar. It is said that Maharaja Bakhat Singh, one day rode on an elephant through the city, and a tree on the road was found with over-hanging branches too thick to allow the howdah pass under freely. The tree was therefore ordered to be cut down but a Julaha, on hearing this, is said to have immediately brought an earthen pot, and covered the whole tree with it.

THE KOLIS.

The Kolis form a very low class. In Marwar, they do not follow the occupation of weavers, although as Col. Tod remarks, "almost all the cloth-weavers throughout India are of the Koli class." They are generally found engaged in menial pursuits. Many also cultivate land. They came into Marwar from Gujrat and abound in Sanchore and Bhinmal. They are said to be illegitimately descended from a Bias Rajput and a slave girl, and in the Rajputana desert, are generally known under the appellations of Chohan Koli, Parihar Koli and the like. They were formerly much addicted to crime, and for this reason, are still classed in Marwar under the Criminal Tribes. They marry in their own caste, and have no matrimonial intercourse with other degraded tribes of the desert.

Col. Tod, thus speaks about them—"Although they pooja all the symbols of Hindu worship, and chiefly the terrific Mata, they scoff at all laws, human or divine, and are little superior to the brutes of their own forests. To them every thing edible is lawful food; cows, buffaloes, the camel, deer, hog; nor do they even object to such as have died a natural death."

WASHERMEN!

THE DHOBİ.

The Dhobis are washermen. They are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The former are mostly found in Marwar, and their number was returned in the present census at 177 males and 149 females. They form an inferior caste, and the uncleanness of their profession is proverbial, but according to a Marwari proverb, the appearance of a Dhobi is regarded a good omen for a traveller. The saying runs as follows—

Dhobi dhoyan Kapran—Samo ai melant.

Shukan bicharo panthia—Pag pag nil karant.

i. e. "If a Dhobi washing clothes comes before you, consider it an auspicious omen, traveller, and rejoice at each step."

The Dhobis of Jodhpore include several tribes of degraded Rajputs such as the Tunwar, the Punwar, the Chohan, the Solankhi and the like. They worship Shakti, and eat flesh. Their women work with them, and though belonging to a menial class are accustomed to wear silver ornaments on their legs. Nata is permitted among them. The earthen pot of the Dhobis in which the clothes are washed is considered unclean and is generally compared to hell by sooth-sayers and demon worshippers.

There are also a few Musalman Dhobis in Marwar, who are reputed to be cleverer at their work than the Hindu Dhobis. They are Sunnis, and mostly follow the customs observed by the Dyers or Charohas, although they marry among their own community.

COTTON-CLEANERS.

THE PINJARA.

The Pinjaras known also in Marwar as the Pinaras are the cotton scutchers. Both Musalmans and Hindus follow this profession, but in Marwar the former alone are found, who from having been converted to Mohamedanism in the time of Shahab-ud-din Ghorı, style themselves as the Ghorı Pathans. In the Panjab they are called Penja, Dhunia or Naddaf, and in Benares they are known as Kateras. Their system of working is so elaborately described by the Revd Mr. Sherring that an extract from his writings will not be out of place here.

"The instrument," he says, "by which the combing and cleaning are performed, is simply a bow. Squatting on the ground before a quantity of fresh cotton, which is ordinarily full of dirt, seeds, bits of stick, and so forth, the bow being in his left hand, and a wooden mallet in his right, the Katera strikes the string of the bow, and brings it quivering to the surface of the cotton, portions of which adhering to it in light fibres are at once caught up by the string. The striking being repeated continuously without interruption, all the cotton is by degrees beautifully combed, and at the same time its foul particles, becoming separated from the fibres, and being weighty fall away of themselves."

In Marwar, there are some Multani Pinjaras who claim descent from the Shekh or Bhelim tribes, while others form a combination of out-caste Rajputs, chiefly of the Chohan, Punwar, Solankhi, Tunwar and Bhati clans. The Punwar Pinjaras worship Malan-Mata and burn perfume in honor of the goddess.

They marry in their own community, and recognize widow marriage. Those living in the country, cultivate land, and some also practise surgery. In Jalor, Bhinmal and Sanhore, where they are styled Kotwal, they are often employed in Begar or forced labour. Their women appear to be quite Hindus by their dress, drawers being very rarely used by them.

SHEPHERDS AND WOOL WEAVERS.

———

This group as already pointed out comes next to the Leather-workers in point of numbers, and is made up of three distinct castes, the figures for which respectively are, as follow—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Ahir	...	984	581	1,565
Ghosi	...	2,793	2,512	5,305
Rehbari	...	60,756	61,912	1,22,668
Total	...	64,533	65,005	1,29,538

THE AHIR.

The Ahirs are herdsmen. They rear cattle, and sell butter and curd. Mr. Ibbetson derives the word from the Sanskrit Abhira, milkman. Some say it is a corruption of Mahir from Mahi, a seller of curd. The Ahirs also cultivate land, and many of them work as coachmen. The Chaprasis employed in the different Agencies of the Rajputana States mostly belong to this tribe.

Accounts vary as regards their origin. According to Manu, they are the descendants of a Brahman father and an Ambastha mother i. e. a woman belonging to the Baid or Physician class. In the Brahma Puran, they are described as the offspring of a Kshatriya by a Vaisya woman. Sir Henry Elliot gives a full description of this pastoral tribe of the Yadu Bansi stock, who were, he says for some time, the universal monarchs of India. They are said to have been formerly held in much greater consideration in India than at present, and mention of them is made in the Ramayana and the Mahabharata. They were once very prominent on the western coast of India, and the country known as Abhira or the land of cow-herds, cherishes their memory in the Puranic Geography. Their importance in the Deccan at one time is also evinced by the town of Asirgurh which still bears the name of its founder, Asa Ahir. They were once the Rajas of Nepal, and held Rewari for sometime where Raja Tula Ram is said to have played an important part during the Sepoy Mutiny.

Mathura is said to have been their original home, and in Marwar they are mostly found in the eastern parganas. They have three great divisions—(1) the Nandbansi, (2) the Jadubansi, and (3) the Gwalbansi, who, as Sir Elliot says, acknowledge no connection except that of their being all Ahirs. They are Vishnuites, and abstain from liquor and meat, though the Jadubansis, who claim Rajput pedigree, have no objection to their use, and they keep their women in parda.

The Ahirs, though industrious and patient, are noted for being always conceited, and are generally found giving themselves airs. They are not well spoken of in the proverbs, and their unfriendliness in time of need is best illustrated by the following saying.

Sabhi Jat Gopal ki—tin Jat be pir.

Vakat pari larje nahin—Banya, Bais, Ahir.

It is thus translated by Mr. Ibbetson. "All castes are Gods' creatures, but three castes are ruthless. When they get a chance they have no shame, the prostitute, the Banya, and the Ahir."

THE GHOSI.

The Ghosis are sellers of milk. They keep large herds of cows, and are hence called Ghosi, from a Sanskrit word signifying a cattle-pen. Sir Henry Elliot as well as Mr. Ibbetson regard the Ghosis as a tribe of Ahirs converted to Mohamedanism. In Marwar, they principally include the Rajput element, and though Musalmans by religion, to all appearance they look like Hindus, and a Hindu will freely buy milk from them. Their vessels for holding milk are always considered pure, though no Hindu will ever drink water from their hands.

They know very little of the Kalma or daily prayers, but generally worship a Sati or immolated widow of the Kalaria clan among them, and get their children shaved in her honor.

The Ghosis do not marry in their own clan, but a younger brother may marry the widow of the elder. Their women are not allowed to wear silver ornaments on their legs. They bury their dead.

THE REHBARI.

The Rehbaris called also Raikas in Marwar are properly breeders of camels. They allege their origin to be coeval with the creation of the camel, declaring that their ancestor was produced by Mahadeva to take care of the first camel which Parvati had created for her amusement.

The Rehbaris have generally two divisions called the Maru, and the Chalkia. The Maru Rehbaris occupy a superior position. They can marry the daughters of the Chalkias, without giving their own daughters in return, and deal only in camels. The Chalkia Rehbaris on the other hand, keep large herds of sheep and goats. They abound in Godwar, and are also known as Pitalias, because their women generally wear brass ornaments.

Among Rehbaris, the descendants of Sāmar alone claim a pure extraction, while the others comprise a combination of several Rajput tribes. Those belonging to the Parihar clan are divided into five Gotras named after the five sons of Nahar Rao Parihar, the Raja of Mundore, who all joined the Rehbari caste. They are as follow—

(3) Khamla	...	(4) Jindkia...	...
(2) Murya	...	(5) Bar	...
(3) Pas	...

The Rehbaris marry among themselves, and recognize widow-marriage.

OIL PRESSERS!

The aggregate number of oil-pressers in Marwar is returned at 4,144 males and 4190 females. They comprise two separate castes; the one is called Teli, and the other Ghanchi, who may eat together; but do not intermarry. The Telis are Hindus as well as Musalmans, while the Ghanchis are Hindus. The figures below will show the number of each class.

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Hindu Telis ...	437	409	846
Musalman Telis ...	231	354	585
Ghanchis ...	3,476	3,427	6903
<hr/>
Total ...	4,144	4,190	8,334

THE TELI.

The Telis occupy an inferior position, and are regarded a very low caste. They are said to be divided into 1,444 classes, the greater portion of whom consist of degraded Rajputs, and in Marwar they mostly belong to the Parihar, Jariwal and Maharania clans.

The Telis are Shivites, and their family deity is named Chowdhrama Mata whom they worship by drawing fourteen lines on the wall, seven traced in milk and seven in a red substance called Roli. The offerings made to the goddess also number fourteen. The original Asthan or temple of the deity is said to stand under a hill on the way between Nawa and Marot, where there are fourteen figures on horse-back engraved on stones. They also worship Ramdeoji and Gogaji, and partake of liquor and meat. Their women wear lac or brass Churas but not ivory ones. Nata is permitted among them.

The Musalman Telis declare themselves to be Shekhs and claim unmixed descent, but a large number are converted Hindus, especially Rajputs. Besides oil pressing, they follow other callings, those of masons, iron-smiths, and cotton cleaners. They always wear a Dhoti, but their women wear trousers, with a gown over them. They can wear silver neck ornaments. Widows are allowed to marry, but not in the family of their late husbands.

THE GHANCHI.

The Ghanchis declare that they were originally Rajputs, and came into Marwar from Gujrat. The tradition of their origin is that some Rajputs were employed to watch over some Telis, who were required to supply oil, on a certain occasion when Sidh Raj Jai Singh of Gujrat ordered the construction of a temple, to be carried on night and day. The Telis are said to have left the works, and the Rajputs had to be engaged in their stead, as a matter of exigency. The men thus employed were excluded from their original community, and subsequently formed a separate caste, under the name of Ghanchis, from Ghani, an oil-mill. They date the formation of their caste from the Samvat year 1191 as will appear from the following Doha—

Samvat 1191 Jeth Tij Rabiwar.

Kherut mel Ghanchi hoa Jai Singh De re bar.

i. e. "It was in Samvat 1191, on Sunday the 3rd of Jeth, in the time of Raja Jai Singh, that the caste of Ghanchis was formed of those who abandoned their cultivation." The chief Rajput clans represented among the Ghanchis are the Parihar, the Punwar, the Solunkhi, the Bhati, the Punwar, the Sisodia, and the Chohan. The Ghanchis of Jodhpore are mostly Bhati Rajputs.

These worship Shakti, and their family deities are the same as those of their original clans. Many of them cultivate land, while some keep cattle, and sell milk, the milk is not, however, so much in favor as that supplied by the Ghosis, as the Ghosis generally have the reputation of not mixing water with it. The Ghanchis do not marry in their own clans. Widow-marriage is recognized.

POTTERS.

THE KUMHARS.

The Kumhars or potters in Marwar are Hindus and Musalmans. They are very numerous, as the following figures show—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Hindu Kumhars ...	26,419	24,697	51,116
Musalman Kumhars ...	5,407	5,118	10,525
Total ...	31,826	29,815	61,641

Mr. Sherring derives the word Kumhar from the Sanskrit Kumbhakara, Kumbha, meaning a water-jar. Kumhars are also known as Parjapats. In the Supplemental Glossary of Sir Henry Elliot, they are stated to be the offspring of a Brahman's Kahari concubine by a Sudra, while Mr. Colebrooke describes them as the descendants of a Brahman and a Chhattri girl. The Kumhars of Marwar, however, trace their descent from Jalandar Nath, the alleged grandson of Brahma. They form a very useful class, and supply all earthen vessels for domestic use, their social standing is, however, very low, and they rank among the village menials. Among superstitious persons, the appearance of a Kumhar on the right side is considered a good omen for a traveller, thus there runs a proverb—

Kumhar, Aru Kochri—Hanwat ne Hirnah.

Eta leeje Jeevana—Parbhare nirnah.

which means—"If you go out early in the morning without break-fast, always keep a potter, screech owl, monkey and deer on your right."

The Marwar Kumhars have seven sub-divisions as noted below, of whom the first six are Hindus, and the last comprises Musalmans.

(1) The Khatér	...	(5) The Purbia	...
(2) The Banda	...	(6) The Mewara	...
(3) The Maru	...	(7) The Moila	...
(4) The Jatia	...

The Khaters occupy a superior position, engage solely in agriculture, and pay rent equally with the Jats and Gujars. They are exempted from every kind of forced labour, and do not marry with other Kumhars. They keep cows and bullocks instead of the donkeys that their brethren use.

The Banda Kumhars do not intermarry either with the Jatias, the Purbias, or the Mewaras, but they can take the daughters of the Marus without giving their own daughters in return. They work as mere potters, and in the country, they fetch water in Begar.

The Maru Kumhars as their name implies, belong chiefly to Marwar and do not intermarry with other Kumhars. Their chief occupation is the making of earthen vessels, but in Jodhpore city they also keep lime kilns, and are known as Chungars in that capacity. 465 males and 378 females, have returned themselves separately as Lime burners or Chunaris, although Kumhars by caste. They do not, however, light the fire in the furnace with their own hands, as they consider it a sin to do so. They generally employ Bhangis or sweepers for the purpose, and pay them some remuneration in return.

The Jatia Kumhars, so called from Jat, meaning hair, for the most part employ themselves in twisting ropes and threads from the hair of sheep and goats. They cultivate land, and carry grain and grass from one village to another on their donkeys.

The Purbia Kumhars are said to have migrated from the east, and generally gain a livelihood by selling grass and wood. They also cultivate land, and some among them make earthen toys.

The Mewara Kumhars, who came from Meywar, make mill-stones, and work as masons.

The women of the Khater, Maru, Purbia, and Jatia Kumhars may wear silver ornaments on their legs, but the Mewara women only use brass ornaments. Ivory Churas are only worn by the Maru and Banda Kumhars. Widow-marriage is recognized among all Kumhars, though the payments made by them on such occasions vary according to the social status of the parties.

The Kumhars follow different creeds. Some are Shivites, others profess Vishnuism, and many worship Shakti. The Purbia Kumhars, as well as those who believe in Ai-Mata abstain from liquor and meat. The Kumhars also differ in some respects among one another, in their ceremonies of betrothal. Among the Jantias, the binding of a thread round the bride's wrist, confirms the betrothal, while among others, the practice is to exchange raw-sugar and cocoanuts. The custom of keeping a would-be son-in-law in their houses is observed by the Banda and Purbia Kumhars. The candidate is known in that case as a Ghar-Juwai, and has to work for some time, as an apprentice to his father-in-law, until married to the daughter, when he goes home with his bride. The bride and the bridegroom among the Banda Kumhars, after the completion of their marriage, are generally taken to the Raj courts, where every body dances together, a Bhat beating a kettle-drum before them, which privilege, they say, was granted to the Banda Kumhars alone, in times past by the Darbar.

The Moila Kumhars are Musalmans, and are said to have come into Marwar from Sindh. They declare that they were originally Samma Rajputs. They make earthen pots, and also cultivate land which they get rent free from Jagirdars, in consideration of their supplying them gratis with the vessels they want. Though Musalmans by religion, they mostly follow Hindu customs. They do not marry in their own clans. On occasions of betrothal, some sugar and cocoanuts are sent to the brides' father, who appoints the marriage day, and intimates the date to the bridegrooms' party by sending a thread with the number of knots in it corresponding to the number of days intervening. The distribution of opium confirms the betrothal which can not be refused. The Toran is also used among them which the bridegroom strikes on the marriage day, according to Hindu customs. Nata is permitted, at which ceremony the Kazi or family priest repeats the Nikah verses over a small sheet or duppatta which the bridegroom presents to his widow-bride.

The Kumhars are said to be divided into numerous clans, each clan having its own sub-divisions who intermarry among themselves.

The Khater Kumhars have the following sub-divisions—

- | | | |
|----------------|-----|-------------------|
| (1) Dubal ... | ... | (5) Kharnālia ... |
| (2) Daiya ... | ... | (6) Māwar ... |
| (3) Renwal ... | ... | (7) Godāwar ... |
| (4) Pipla ... | ... | |

The following are the sub-divisions of the Banda Kumhars who include the largest proportion of Rajputs.

- | | | |
|------------------|------------------|--------------------|
| (1) Chohan ... | (5) Godela ... | (9) Bhati ... |
| (2) Jadra ... | (6) Kalwar ... | (10) Kalupora ... |
| (3) Kavaria ... | (7) Ania ... | (11) Hatwa ... |
| (4) Jalwania ... | (8) Varājana ... | (12) Kundelwal ... |
| | | (13) Manoria ... |

These generally worship Ramdeoji; and do pooja to the Khejri tree.

The Maru Kumhars are subdivided as under—

- | | | |
|------------------|-----------------|-------------------|
| (1) Chandora ... | (5) Bagri ... | (9) Muglao ... |
| (2) Gola ... | (6) Ratogan ... | (10) Kharatia ... |
| (3) Tak ... | (7) Rogat ... | (11) Solankhi ... |
| (4) Mal ... | (8) Jojaora ... | (12) Deora ... |

The Golas are followers of Aiji, and bury their dead. The others worship Shakti.

The sub-divisions of the Jatias are as follow—

- | | |
|---------------------|-------------------|
| (1) Jalandhara ... | (8) Ladona ... |
| (2) Ghorila ... | (2) Sevota ... |
| (3) Tak ... | (10) Dhundora ... |
| (4) Bambhoria ... | (11) Liba ... |
| (5) Jijnodia ... | (12) Sardiwal ... |
| (6) Chhapparwal ... | (13) Moora ... |
| (7) Bhera ... | |

Some among them worship Shiva, others Vishnu. Their Kuldevi or family deity is Kalka.

The Purbias have their following sections in Marwar—

- | | |
|---------------------|-------------------|
| (1) Vanavaria ... | (8) Kathor ... |
| (2) Tingaria ... | (9) Singarwal ... |
| (3) Sinavaria ... | (10) Chakenia ... |
| (4) Mathania ... | (11) Enia ... |
| (5) Jagarwal ... | (12) Dilwari ... |
| (6) Khatnavaria ... | (13) Jhalwal ... |
| (7) Morwal ... | (14) Lodwal ... |

They worship Mataji, Hanumanji and Ramdeoji.

The chief sub-divisions of the Mewaras as found in Marwar are—

(1) Detwal	...	(5) Munder	...
(2) Dameria	...	(6) Kathor	...
(3) Reniwal	...	(7) Tak	...
(4) Mandania	...

They were originally Chohan and Ghelot Rajputs, and profess Vishnuism.

The Moila Kumhars have the following sub-divisions in Marwar—

(1) Maiyan	...	(5) Lola	...
(2) Karya	...	(6) Jheria	...
(3) Jokhia	...	(7) Hasania	...
(4) Kandia	...	(8) Muraria	...

SALT WORKERS.

THE KHAROL.

The Kharols or Kharwals as they are often called are properly speaking persons who are employed on salt works, but in these days many Kharols have taken to cultivation, and many work as labourers. In the Panjab, they go under the name of Nungars, and in the North-Western Provinces, they are known as Nunias. Mr. Ibbetson regards the name as denoting an occupation rather than a true caste.

The number of Kharols in Marwar is returned at 1,300 males and 1,581 females. They abound in Pachbhadra, Phalodi and other parts of the country where salt is abundant. They assert that they were originally connected with Rajputs, who adopted this occupation in the time of Akbar, a fact which is alluded to in the following Hindi couplet referring to their origin.

Akbar Patsa kopio—Nahin kini re sare.

Kharag mel Kharol hoa—Pirthi Pat re bare.

i. e. It is in no man's power to appease the wrath of Akbar, and the people in his reign abandoning their cultivation adopted the profession of Kharols.

The Kharols are divided into several clans, mostly bearing Rajput names, of whom the following are the chief:—

(1) Sonigra	...	(5) Gamti	...
(2) Hada	...	(6) Sisodia	...
(3) Chohan	...	(7) Hiddawat	...
(4) Machhelia	...	(8) Punwar	...

These clans intermarry, but the first three may not intermarry with each other. They worship Shakti, and their Kuldevis are the Moran Mata, Ambhaji, and Sambharaji. In their marriages, they only avoid the Gotra of their father, so that a daughter-in-law may be of the same clan as her mother-in-law, which is rarely allowed among other Hindus. They recognize widow marriage.

GOLD-SMITHS REFUSE COLLECTORS.

THE NYARIA.

The Nyarias are said to be connected with the Sunars, but in Marwar they form a distinct caste, and are generally Musalmans; who came from Multan. They include among them a large number of converted Rajputs of whom the Chohans, Solankhis, Parihars and Ghoris represent the chief sub-divisions. Their number in the present census, is returned at 140 males and 93 females.

The chief occupation of the Nyarias, as the derivation of their name (from nyara, separate) shows, is to separate the precious metal from the refuse of the workings of the Sunars. They are employed in melting gold and silver in the Raj mints. Mr. Sherring thus writes of their occupation—"The refuse collected in the shops of gold-smiths and silver-smiths, consisting of small particles of gold and silver, intermingled with dust and all sorts of rubbish, is purchased and carried away by the Nyaria, who with great care and diligence separates the precious from the vile. This occupation is sufficiently remunerative to give employment to a distinct caste of Hindus."

PALKI-BEARERS, COOKS AND WATERMEN.

The chief castes returned under this group are the Kahars, the Bhar-Bhunjas, the Bhatyaras, and the Bhishtis. The two first are Hindus and the two last Musalmans. Their aggregate number is returned at 2,525 males and 2,379 females. The following are the figures for each caste respectively—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Kahars ...	1,760	1,335	3,095
Bhar-Bhunjas ...	244	661	905
Bhatyaras ...	35	21	56
Bhishtis ...	486	362	848

THE KAHAR.

The Kahars are properly Palki-bearers, the word Kahar being said to be a contraction of Kandhar from Kandha, a shoulder. They work as personal attendants, and are often employed as watermen and cooks. Their widows may marry again, while their social standing is not considered low, as all castes will eat and drink from their hands. In Marwar, there are three divisions of the Kahars, viz. (1) the Purbia (2) the Dhundari, and (3) the Marwari. But they are not connected with each other in any way and do not intermarry or eat together.

The Purbias claim an unmixed origin and are generally called Bhois. Both the Purbias and the Dhundharis carry pallanquins, and in the capacity of personal servants, they clean vessels in which food is eaten, but they will not work as grooms, nor carry any burden on their heads like Coolies. It is said that a man once desired his Kahars to bring some loads of grain from the market, which they refused to do. He then ordered his palanquin to be made ready, and having himself bought the grain, placed it in the palanquin, to which the Kahars raised no objection, but readily carried their master together with his load of grain.

The Marwari Kahars generally known as Mehra, trace descent from the Rajputs, chiefly from the Chohan clans. The Kaim-Khanis though Musalmans by caste, also seem to have intermarried with them.

Local tradition assigns the origin of the word Mehra to the time of the defeat of Pirthi Raj Chohan by Shahab-ud-din Ghorî, when many Rajputs were taken captive. The story current is that the conquering Sultan soon after his victory fell ill, and was cured of his pain by a Rajput prisoner, who as a reward for his services, asked for the release of his companions, and all those whom he declared mera or mine were set at liberty. The party thus released formed a distinct caste, and having adopted the profession of palanquin bearers, they came to be called Meras or Mehras.

The Mehras are mostly employed as cooks, and prepare meat and other sorts of food which in Marwari colloquialism, are known as mehron ki tayari, signifying things cooked by the Mehras. They also act as watermen and carriers, but will, on no account, clean vessels as is the custom of the Purbias and Dhundharis. Their women are employed in grinding lime and other kinds of general labour, insomuch that every woman thus engaged is designated by the name of Mehri.

The Mehras are generally Shivites and worship Mataji. Their manners and customs in many respects correspond to those of the Malis which accounts for the expression Mali-Mehra, a common saying in Marwar. Their women wear ivory churas which the Purbia and Dhundhari women do not wear.

The Kirs, who engage themselves in the cultivation of melons, form a separate community among the Kahars. They are only returned from Raipore and Kuchawan. There are no fishermen or Jhinwars in Marwar.

T H E B H A R - B H U N J A .

The Bhar-Bhunjas, as their name implies from Bhar, furnace, and bhunna to parch, are grain roasters. In Wilson's glossary they are said to have sprung from the intercourse of a Kahar with a Sudra woman, and Mr. Sherring also describes them as being closely connected with the Kahars, though not in the way of marriage. But in Marwar, they claim descent from the Jadu Rajputs, and are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The Hindu Bhar-Bhunjas are found in the western districts, and chiefly in Jodhpore city, where they work as Halwais on the occasion of public feasts among the Hindus. The Musalman Bhar-Bhunjas are generally only met with in the eastern parts of Marwar.

The Bhar-Bhunjas of Marwar are divided into eight sub-divisions, who intermarry without any restriction. They are as follow—

- | | | | |
|----------------|-----|-----------------|-----|
| (1) Sukh-Sejia | ... | (5) Dhankuta | ... |
| (2) Chohan | ... | (6) Kanowjia | ... |
| (3) Bhati | ... | (7) Kayath | ... |
| (4) Bhatnagar | ... | (8) Kishen-goti | ... |

All Bhar-Bhunjas worship Shakti, and usually abstain from liquor and meat. The offerings which they make to their Kuldevi consist for the most part of dal, bread and oil. Their family priests are the Sanchora Brahmans, they do not make use of the chowri at their marriages. Widow marriage is recognized. Their women are not allowed to have their noses pierced for rings nor do they wear gold ornaments round their necks, or patronize a yellow-colour. Lac Churas are generally worn, not ivory ones.

In the Panjab, the Bhar-Bhunjas are stated to be Jhinwars, and are occasionally called Bhojwas and Chataris. Mr. Sherring divides the Bhar-Bhunjas of Benares into seven sub-castes, who do not intermarry. Some sell sweatmeats as well as parched grain, others cultivate the Singhara.

THE BHATYARA.

The Bhatyaras are the Serai-keepers and sell ready cooked food, the name being derived from Bhatti an oven. In Marwar their number is very limited, and they are only found in Jodhpore city. They are Sunni Musalmans, who are said to have come into Marwar from Amroha in the North-Western Provinces. They follow the customs of the ordinary Musalmans, and there is nothing worth noticing about them. Widows are allowed to marry, though not in the family of their late husbands.

THE BHISHTI.

The Bhishtis carry water in goat-skins. "The word Bhishti," says Sir Henry Elliot, "means literally an inhabitant of Bahisht or paradise, and the name is said to have been applied to them by the Mohamedan invaders either in derision or from the relief they gave to the thirsty soldiery." They are also called Pakhalias, and in the Panjab they are generally known as Mashkias.

In Marwar the word Bhishti is applied to Hindus as well as to Musalmans, the latter being distinguished by the term Sakka. They are also styled Mian and Jamadar.

The Hindu Bhishtis are for the most part Mális and Kumhars, who retain their respective castes. The Musalman Bhishtis form a distinct class, and include Chohans, Parihars, Bhatís and other Rajput clans. They may be divided into Desis and Pardesis, who do not intermarry. The Desis exclusively belong to Marwar, and are in the habit of bathing like the Hindus after attending a funeral. Their women wear petticoats. The Pardesis are said to have come chiefly from Ulwar, Shekhawati or Haryana, and their women wear drawers.

The Musalman Bhishtis supply water to Hindus freely. They entertain a high regard for their Mashaks or goat-skins, and with a view to keep them clean and unpolluted, usually wear a red cloth as a waistband, but when they take off their Mashaks and the waistband, they are looked upon with caste prejudice, and no Hindu would drink water from their hands, or allow his vessels to be touched by them.

DISTILLERS.

THE KALAL.

The number of Kalals returned in Marwar is 2,622 males and 2,955 females. The word Kalal is said to be a contraction of Kalapakal signifying one well skilled in shaping his conduct according to the requirements of the occasion, which probably refers to the improvements gradually introduced by the Kalals in the various articles used for the preparation of liquor. Some persons derive the name Kalal from one Kallu Mahajan. The fable runs that certain people were concealed by Viskarma in the trunk of a peepul tree, but Kalka Mata wanted to disclose the secret. The goddess therefore taught the art of preparing spirits to a Mahajan named Kallu, and the drink thus made was taken by Viskarma, who through the effects of intoxication, confessed what he had done. The descendants of Kallu came to be called Kalals. They form a distinct caste, and practise distillation as an hereditary profession, although the introduction of the Abkari system into Marwar, is by degrees diminishing their trade. Mr. Ibbatson describes them as being distinguished for enterprize, energy and obstinacy, which he confirms by quoting a saying—"Death may budge, but a Kalal won't." In Benares as well as in the west of the Panjab, the Kalals are called Kalwars. The present ruling family of Kapurthala is said to have a Kalal origin.

In Marwar, there are three divisions of Kalals—(1) the Súngas; (2) the Tak Kalals and (3) the Mewara Kalals. They are not connected with each other, and intermarry among themselves. The Sungas, as already noted in connection with the Mahajans, are Khundelwals. They sell but do not drink spirits, a feature which distinguishes them from other Kalals. The Tak Kalals claim descent from a Tak Rajput, and occupy a social position superior to the Mewaras whose daughters they can marry, without giving their own daughters in return.

The Kalals worship Shakti, and follow the Rajput customs. Widows are permitted to remarry. The Kalals are said to have been divided into eighty-four clans, of whom the principal found in Marwar, are—

(1) Khumbura ...	(4) Malwia ...	(7) Sidoo ...
(2) Karra ...	(5) Katar ...	(8) Borisa ...
(3) Nadola ...	(6) Talayach ...	(9) Nagda ...

There are also Musalman Kalals in Marwar, said to have been descended from a Tak Rajput by a Musalman wife. They distill but do not drink spirits, and are found in the eastern districts of Marwar.

BUTCHERS!

THE KASSAI.

The Kassais are Musalmans and their number is returned at 1302 males and 1240 females. They sell meat, but do not slaughter goats. This act is performed by a Mullah called Halali, who is hired for the purpose, and slaughters goats after the Mohamedan fashion.

The Kassais of Marwar belong to the Sunni sect, and are the followers of Khawaja Pir. They are divided into several clans mostly comprising converted Rajputs, but those who belong to the Behlim tribe, claim an unmixed origin.

In Marwar, the Kassai caste is generally engaged in four different occupations. Those who sell meat are the true Kassais or butchers and they deal in goats as a saying runs—Chhali Kassai ko hi dhije hai, i. e. "the goats trust only in Kassais." Those working as tanners are known by the name of Khalpias or Khatiks. They are also called Beoparis. Many of the Kassais work as Chawalias whose main occupation consists in lifting stone slabs for roofing purposes. They are said to have taken to this calling during the time of Maharaja Bije Singh when an order discontinuing the sale of meat was issued. Other Kassais carve stones, who are styled Silawats.

All the four classes of Kassais marry among themselves alone, and do not give their daughters in marriage to other Musalmans. Their women sell meat in shops and do not observe parda. They usually wear drawers.

THE KHATIK.

The Khatiks generally tan the hides of goats, sheep, deer, and tigers but not of cows, buffaloes, or camels. Their number in Marwar is 3051 males and 6828 females. They properly belong to the group of leather-workers, though in the Census Tables of Marwar they are returned under the butchers. Mr. Ibbetson, however, includes them among the scavenger castes and ranks them below the Chamars. The Khatiks also work as syces and butchers, but in Marwar, their separate occupations do not form distinct clans, as is the case in Benares, where the syces and butchers are distinguished by Mr. Sherring under the designations of Ghor-Charaqs and Bakar-Kasacs respectively. The butcher-Khatiks are generally Musalmans, who do not slaughter goats themselves, but get them killed by a Halali after the Musalman fashion. Many among the Khatiks distill liquor, while others cultivate land and work as labourers.

The Khatiks claim Rajput pedigree and almost all their sub-divisions bear Rajput names. Those living in Nagore, Sambhar, Nawa and Marote belong to the Chohan clans. It is said that their ancestor in times past, was turned out of the Rajput community for having brought back a Mirg-chhala or the skin of a deer while on a pilgrimage to the holy Ganges. The Khatiks of Nawa and Marote, however, allege that being originally Chhatris, they used to be employed by the Brahmans to slaughter goats and make offerings of the flesh in the sacred fire when grand sacrifices took place, which accounts for their now following the occupation of butchers.

The Khatiks are generally Shivites, and worship Kalka Mata as their Kuldevi. They have also a system of Panchayat to settle their petty disputes, their punches, being generally styled Mehtars. They do not eat or smoke with the Chamars, and marry in their own caste. The usual ceremonies of seven pheras are observed by them, and Sirimali Brahmans attend as their priests.

On the occasion of betrothals they drink liquor instead of distributing opium. The Acharaja Brahmans take part in their funeral ceremonies.

The Khatiks are not permitted by the Raj to use sugar or khand in the preparation of their sweetmeats at caste-feasts or niats, so they use jagree. Their women are allowed to wear silver ornaments.

The following are the sub-divisions of the Khatiks as returned in the present Census—

1	Chandal	...	5	Chola	...	9	Taki	...
2	Barawa	...	6	Khirhi	...	10	Daima	...
3	Bhogaria	...	7	Taora	...	11	Bagri	...
4	Bachra	...	8	Chamarya	...

LEATHER WORKERS!

The Leather workers as already stated make up the largest group. Their aggregate number according to the present Census is 263,854 bearing a proportion of 36·39 to the total population returned under the head of Artizans and village menials. Their social standing is next above the scavengers, and they are generally employed in menial occupations. The following are the chief castes comprised under this group—

1 Chamar	...	4 Bhambi	...	7 Kamaria	...
2 Regar	...	5 Gurra	...	8 Dabgar	...
3 Mochi	...	6 Sargara	...

THE CHAMAR.

The Chamars are returned at 29,973 males and 21,037 females. They are for the most part, employed in curing hides and tanning and dyeing leather. Mr. Ibbetson derives the name from the Sanskrit Charmakara meaning a worker in hides. The Chamars declare that they were originally Brahmans. The tradition current among them says that in former times, seven brothers of Brahman caste were once cooking their food, when a calf happened to fall into the fire, and died. The carcass was removed by the youngest brother, who became in consequence, excluded from the Brahman community, and formed the Chamar caste. Mr. Sherring, on the authority of Manu states that the Chamars are one half of Brahmanical, one-fourth of Vaisya and one-fourth of Sudra descent. According to some people, they are regarded as being descended from the aboriginal tribes. Sir Henry Elliot represents them as a dark race, and a fair Chamar, he says is as rare an object as a black Brahman. The Marwari Chamars have the reputation of drinking water very often, as a saying runs—

Ghoran ghas ne Chamaran pani.

i. e. the Chamars drink water as constantly as the horses eat grass.

The Chamars venerate the holy Ganges, and worship Ramdeoiji. They eat the flesh of animals, such as cows, buffaloes or camels but abstain from the flesh of pigs. Their priests are the Gurras (a low caste) who attend on occasions of marriages and deaths. The Chamars can smoke with the Rehgars and Bhaubis, but they marry in their own caste. They are divided into numerous clans, the same as those given in connection with the Rehgars, who are said to be an offshoot of the Chamars.

The Chamars are called Balais in Bikanir, where a Chamar named Lalgir is said to have founded a religious sect, whose followers are styled Alakgirs.

There are also some Musalman Mochis in Marwar who have separately returned themselves at 123 males and 107 females. They follow no other profession but that of making shoes. They are for the most part converted Rajputs, and belong to the Sunni sect. Their women are not secluded, and wear trousers and a tilak (a kind of tunic).

THE REHGARS.

The Rehgars are a branch of the Chamars, and follow the same occupation. Their number according to the present Census is returned at 10,562 males and 12,672 females. They claim descent from one Raidass, a great saint among the Chamars, who lived at Mandugurh in Malwa. Raidass was in the habit of mending shoes in the streets, but he was an orthodox worshipper of the Ganges, and performed a good many miracles. The well known river Chumbal running through south-eastern Rajputana is believed by the Rehgars to be the holy Ganges which took its rise from the Kundi or water-pot of Raidass. The tradition current is that Raidass had a daughter who was so renowned for her beauty that even the Rana of Chitor sought her hand. An army was sent from Chitor to fetch the damsel, but when it reached the house of Raidass, the Ganges burst forth from his Kundi, and swept away the army.

The Rehgars are supposed to correspond with the Chamars of the North-Western Provinces. They take their name from Raidass, and are known under the same appellation at Jeypore. But in Jodhpore city as well as in the western part of Marwar, they are called Jattias, probably because, as they allege, their females adopted the dress of the Jat women with whom they lived. In Bikanir, they are, however, known as Rungias from their being accustomed to dye the hides of dead animals. In Meywar they are called Bolas. Notwithstanding their different appellations, they all intermarry. They may eat with the Chamars, but do not intermarry with them.

The Rehgars of eastern Marwar generally wear the sacred thread, and marry by the ceremony of the seven pheras. Their priests are the Chheniat Brahmans who attend at their marriages, no Brahman is required for their funerals. Widow marriage is allowed.

The Rehgars are divided into numerous clans, of whom the chief are noted below.

1	Kánsotia ...	24	Sunàriwàl ...	47	Màsalpuria ...
2	Singària ...	25	Mowanpuria ...	48	Savlània ...
3	Mandavaria...	26	Mudotia ...	49	Aloria ...
4	Mutariá ...	27	Umrikha ...	50	Pipalwà ...
5	Jàtolia ...	28	Kawària ...	51	Kàriwàl ...

6	Dambaria ...	29	Masiwāl ...	52	Dutānia ...
7	Vachhāvadīa	30	Phalwāria ...	53	Jāvrodīa ...
8	Kānkharia ...	31	Gogrodīa ...	54	Kholīa ...
9	Chukaria ...	32	Junwāl ...	55	Palīa ...
10	Bhurīa ...	33	Kholwāl ...	56	Valotīa ...
11	Gīnolīa ...	34	Devatwāl ...	57	Jagarwāl ...
12	Adolīa ...	35	Sunwāsā ...	58	Khimkaria ...
13	Borā ...	26	Bhandāria ...	59	Dilip ...
14	Ujīnīa ...	37	Nogīa ...	60	Bichmundīa...
15	Khatnāvāria	38	Chomia ...	61	Morīa ...
16	Gādegāvalīa	39	Sukaria ...	62	Varīa ...
17	Kurolīa ...	40	Jārolīa ...	63	Khatwalīa ...
18	Bhākriwāl ...	41	Ghatolīa ...	64	Baletīa ...
19	Gusainval ...	42	Jāt ...	65	Tangāyā ...
20	Jājorīa ...	43	Hingunīa ...	66	Basiwal ...
21	Bhoparīa ...	44	Kharetīa ...	67	Bakolīa ...
22	Kurarīa ...	45	Pigolīa ...	68	Vazirpurīa ...
23	Bukolīa ...	46	Bhosiwāl ...

T H E M O C H I .

The Mochis are properly shoe makers and workers in leather. They are Hindus and Musalmans, and the following figures show their respective numbers as returned in the present Census.

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Hindu Mochis ...	3,194	5,164	6,358
Musalman Mochis ...	123	107	230

Mr. Ibbetson regards the term Mochi as properly the name of an occupation, signifying a worker in tanned leather as distinguished from a tanner. He describes Mochis as proverbially unpunctual in rendering service, and quotes the saying—" The Mochis' tomorrow never comes."

The Hindu Mochis claim descent from the Rajputs who adopted this profession for fear of Parasu Ram. In Marwar they have four sub-divisions who follow different professions. They are the Miyangars, the Pannigars, the Zingars, and the Jorigars.

The Miyangars make scabbards for swords and daggers, and also leather belts and boxes called Jamdānis. They were originally Chohan, Goyal, Solunkhi, and Punwar Rajputs.

The Pannigars prepare leaves of gold and silver, and originally belonged to the Chohan and Dabi clans of Rajputs.

The Zingars are properly speaking saddlers, and comprise several clans of Rajputs.

The Jorigars make shoes and may correctly be called Mochis. They were originally Miyangars but adopted the profession of shoe-making during the time of Maharaja Ajit Singh.

All these four divisions intermarry, and eat and drink together. They worship Shakti, but many of them are followers of Ramshah Pir. The Sirimali Brahmans attend their marriage and funeral ceremonies. Among the well-to-do Mochis, only those are allowed to give public marriage feasts who wear gold rings on their wrists; and similarly on occasions of funerals, only those who get themselves shaved, can invite their caste fellows to a public dinner. The Mochis like other low caste people have a system of Panchayat of their own. It consists of four Punches and a president called a Chowdhri who settle all disputes.

The Mochi women embroider well in silk on shoes, scabbards, and belts.

T H E B H A M B I .

The Bhambis form the largest proportion of the group of Leather-workers, being alone returned at 101,273 males and 81,809 females. Every village in Marwar contains a certain number of Bhambis, who, as Colonel Walter says, "perform the general work of the village, look after travellers, and get in return the skins of all unclaimed dead animals; on occasions of marriages, they receive food; and at harvest time, they are given by the heads of villages, a certain quantity of grain; they are also weavers and workers in leather." One Bhambi in each village is granted by the Raj a pagri or turban and a lathi or stick. He is considered the head village-Bhambi, and arranges for every kind of Begar work.

The Bhambis are the same as the Meghwals, the latter being a general term, derived from the name of a Brahman Rishi called Megh from whom the Meghwals trace their descent. The Bhambis are also called Balais, and cultivate land, though only to a small extent. Those who remove the carcasses of dead animals from villages or towns are called Dheds.

Traditions say that in times past when Marwar was troubled by foreign inroads, a large number of Rajputs, Jats and Charans joined the Bhambi caste, and thus in course of time, there arose four sub-divisions among the Bhambis as follow.

- (1)—The Adu or unmixed Bhambis.
- (2)—The Maru Bhambis comprising Rajputs.
- (3)—The Jata Bhambis including Jats. 1,128 males and 1,029 females have separately returned themselves under this head.
- (4)—The Charnia Bhambis including Charans.

The two first divisions are very closely connected and intermarry, while the two last only marry in their own communities respectively. The Bhambis are not allowed to wear gold and silver ornaments, but an exception is made in the case of the head village-Bhambi and his wife. There is no striking peculiarity in the dress of the men, but the Maru-Bhambi women generally wear a Ghagra or petti-coat of country chintz, while the Jata Bhambis dress themselves like the Jat women and are distinguished from the latter only by the use of lac churas instead of ivory ones. The women of the Charnia Bhambis wear a dress of yellow colour like the Charan women.

The Bhambis are Vishnuites, and worship Ramdeoji. Their family deity is named Kherla Mata. The offerings made to the deity are received by the Gurras who act as priests to the Bhambis. They hold the Tulsi plant in high esteem, but eat the flesh of cows and other animals except pigs. The dead are burned with the exception of the followers of Ramdeoji and Pabu who are buried.

On occasions of betrothal, cocoanuts, raw sugar, and opium are exchanged. The marriage ceremonies comprise seven phas at the Chowri which are performed under the guidance of their priests, the Gurras. Polygamy is allowed among the Bhambis, but two sisters cannot marry the same husband, and a widower is not permitted to marry his deceased wives' sister. Nata is recognized among them.

The Bhambis are divided into several Khamps, or sections each having its own sub-divisions.

The following are the chief Khamps of the Adu Bhambis.

1 Rangi	...	3 Adra	...	5 Meehad	...
2 Chandel	...	4 Jogchand	...	6 Jogud	...

The Maru Bhambis are divided as under—

1 Palecha	...	25 Bhungaria	...	49 Agrecha	...
2 Parmar	...	26 Bhadru	...	50 Chawania	...
3 Dangi	...	27 Baral	...	51 Agri	...
4 Solankhi	...	28 Gelotia	...	52 Chikhra	...
5 Bamania	...	29 Oochal	...	53 Mandoka	...
6 Barari	...	30 Dochra	...	54 Bhavru	...
7 Bhatia	...	31 Ghalria	...	55 Karelan	...
8 Farihar	...	32 Aipa	...	56 Bochia	...
9 Thanvlecha	...	33 Daiya	...	57 Rida	...
10 Vagani	...	34 Barupa	...	58 Gujaria	...
11 Kudnechi	...	35 Pargi	...	59 Goda	...
12 Palasna	...	36 Goyal	...	60 Rarbara	...
13 Ranwa	...	37 Dadlia	...	61 Gander	...

14	Ankhia	...	38	Kachawa	...	62	Bagrecha	...
15	Lewa	...	39	Ghata	...	63	Churiala	...
16	Sonal	...	40	Hatela	...	64	Sawela	...
17	Karela	...	41	Lukra	...	65	Vania	...
18	Chawania	...	42	Khandia	...	66	Jeypal	...
19	Loha	...	43	Mangsa	...	67	Lilar	...
20	Churnia	...	44	Sedu	...	68	Marwan	...
21	Laiya	...	45	Makwana	...	69	Janwania	...
22	Ayech	...	46	Barupal	...	70	Borana	...
23	Bagri	...	47	Sundal	...
24	Mubarcha	...	48	Rangi	...

The Jata Bhambis have the following sub-divisions.

1	Depan	...	4	Joram	...	7	Vikunia	...
2	Merra	...	5	Chahelia	...	8	Joya	...
3	Sarwa	...	6	Bamania	...	9	Chawania	...

The chief sections among the Charnia Bhambis are—

1	Inda	...	2	Chanpa	...	3	Nagia	...
---	------	-----	---	--------	-----	---	-------	-----

THE GURRA.

The Gurras are the priests or spiritual guides of the Bhambis, and in Marwar they number 717 males and 585 females. They declare that they were originally Brahmans, and trace their descent from Garg Rishi, the alleged son of Brahma. They attend the marriage ceremonies of the Bhambis, light the sacred fire, and recite the sacred mantras. Besides acting as priests, the Gurras also act as tailors and barbers to the Bhambis, and attend their marriage processions with lighted torches in their hands.

The Gurras have no priests of their own, the priestly duties in their case being generally performed by their nephews or sister's sons. They marry by four pheras, and observe the usual Hindu customs, although freely indulging in the use of liquor, and eating the flesh of cows and other animals. They may take bread from the hands of Bhambis and Minas, but not from Bhils, Sargarahs, or other low castes.

The Gurras profess Vishnuism. Their Kuldevi is Malan-Mata, and they generally worship Hanumanji. The followers of Ai-Mata and Ram-deoji bury their dead, the others burn them. Some permit widow marriage, but many do not.

The Gurras are said to be divided into eighty-four Khamps or sections and include various Brahmanical as well as Rajput sects.

The Gurras of Sanchores trace their origin to certain Brahmans of Patan in Gujrat. The story current is that in times past, Raja Sidh-Raj Jai Singh of Gujrat had a tank excavated at Patan but found it incapable of retaining water. A Joshi by name Hodal, who was consulted about the matter, declared that the tank had been constructed at an inauspicious time, and proposed the sacrifice of one of the members of the ruling family, as the best remedy for securing the desired supply of water. The Raja had a son, who on account of his ugliness had been deserted in the jungle in his infancy, and afterwards received and brought up under the care of a Bhambi. The unfortunate boy was doomed to be the victim of the Joshis' prophecy, and was burnt alive by the Brahmans. But those who took part in the ceremony, were excluded from the Brahman community, and had no alternative but to act as priests to the Bhambis by joining the Gurra caste.

The Gurras of Godwar have a similar tradition, and claim descent from a Pirohit named Phandar who was brought up by the Minas. They as a rule worship Saturn and receive all offerings made on Saturday, like the Desantries or Dakots.

The following are the chief Khamps of the Gurras found in Marwar:—

(1) Phándar ...	(2) Palliwal ...	(3) Sarla ...
(4) Solunkki ...	(5) Parihar ...	(6) Goyal ...
(7) Géwál ...	(8) Karyaja ...	(9) Daglá ...
(10) Bhut ...	(11) Bijal ...	(12) Patyana ...
(13) Khundará ...	(14) Sarlá ...	(15) Salécha ...
(16) Dabia ...	(17) Moriwál ...	(18) Kantia ...
(19) Seocha ...	(20) Sàrola ...	(21) Bhinmala ...
(22) Pálrécha ...	(23) Sàngtá ...	(24) Jájiwal ...
(25) Padriwál ...	(26) Sánd ...	(27) Jarya ...
(28) Kála ...	(29) Loyáncha ...	(30) Ludwa ...
(31) Mundará ...	(32) Bijak ...	(33) Bagrécha ...
(34) Pichyana ...	(35) Sikla ...	(36) Siryacha ...
(37) Palya ...	(38) Somésár ...	(39) Ganjan ...
(40) Asal ...

THE SARGARAH.

The Sargarahs are said to be akin to the Chamars, and are returned in Marwar at 1229 males and 1191 females. In former times, they manufactured Tirs or arrows, and were called Sargarahs from Sar, the pointed part of an arrow. Their present occupation is, however, to guard the entrances to villages, and the gate-keepers employed at the Jodhpore city gates belong to this class. They also act as village messengers. They work in the fields, and are paid by the villagers for doing duty as trumpeters or drum beaters as occasion requires.

The Sargarahs trace their descent from Valmiki, a Brahman sage and the author of the Ramayana, to whom there is a temple dedicated in the village of Pichiak in Bilara, where a fair is annually held in his honor. The Pujari or priest of the temple is generally of the Sargarah caste, and receives all the offerings made to the idol of the sage. In their marriage ceremonies, the Sargarahs observe the usual Hindu customs, at which the Gurrals attend as priests. Widow marriage is recognized, and the dead are burnt face downwards.

The Sargarahs do not eat animal flesh and venerate cows. They have several sub-divisions which include a large proportion of Rajputs.

Those chiefly found in Marwar are—

1	Esarcha	...	11	Jogi	...	20	Madhy	...
2	Bhaya	...	12	Dibya	...	21	Ochar	...
3	Hariyal	...	13	Paniwal	...	23	Jayal	...
4	Besa	...	14	Oplana	...	23	Bora	...
5	Mota	...	15	Joyan	...	24	Dhudhang	...
6	Lavecha	...	16	Khatak	...	25	Joran	...
7	Dhanak	...	17	Siwancha	...	26	Kharar	...
8	Mol	...	18	Makwanas	...	24	Man'h	...
9	Mit	...	19	Makwana	...	28	Maru	...
19	Khaharya	...

THE KAMARYA.

The Kamaryas are the buffoons of the Meghwals or Bhambis, and their chief music is drawn from the Tumbura or guitar. Roughly speaking they are a branch of the Bhambis with whom they can eat and drink, and partake of all kinds of flesh which the Bhambis eat. But they marry in their own caste, and recognize widow marriage. Their priests are the Gurras who attend marriage and funeral ceremonies. They bury their dead.

The Kamarya woman are noted for playing a kind of music, known as Tera-Tal. They also sing and dance, and entertain the Bhambis. They may wear silver ornaments on their legs, which the Bhambi women may not wear.

THE DABGAR.

The Dabgars are a separate caste, and their number in Marwar according to the present Census is 153 males and 116 females. They claim Rajput ancestry, the chief clans they include being the Punwars, Chohans, Bhatias, Deoras, and Khichis, each worshipping its own original deity or Kuldevi. The chief occupation of the Dabgars is the manufacture of leathern vessels or raw hide jars for storing oil and ghee. Many occupy themselves in making shields, and are known as Dhālgars, but they belong to the same stock, and intermarry with the Dabgars. Some cultivate land.

The Dabgars occupy a somewhat superior position among leather workers, and will not eat from the hands of Chamars, Mochis or Bhambis. They mostly follow Rajput customs, and Brahmans take part in their marriage ceremonies. Widow marriage is permitted.

SCAVENGERS.

THE BHANGI.

The Bhangis or sweepers are the lowest caste and are regarded as very unclean by the Hindus. Col. Tod calls them the very refuse of mankind. They are employed in sweeping and removing night soil. They also make chhaj or winnowing pans. They are very rarely found in the country, and abound chiefly in large towns. Their number in Marwar is returned at 665 males and 577 females. Sir Henry Elliot, on the authority of Purans makes them the descendants of a Sudra from a Brahman widow.

The Bhangis are also called Lālbegis, Khākrobs, Halālkhors, and Mehtars, which names are thus accounted for by Sir Elliot—"Bhangi probably from their drunken habits, from bhāng; Lālbegi from their object of worship; Khakrob, from Persian Khak, earth, and rob sweeping, Hataalkhor, from Persian halal, lawfull, and Khor, eating, because every thing is lawfull to them as food, Mehtar, from Persian Mehtar prince, said to have been applied to them in derision."

In the Panjab, the Bhangis are generally known as Churas, and are described by Mr. Ibbetson to be the sweepers and scavengers par excellence of the province.

The Bhangis profess no particular religion, but according to Sir Elliot, they are more Musalman than Hindu. "They bury their dead, he says, occasionally sacrifice, in the name of Lālbeg, a fowl which has its throat cut after the Musalman fashion, and perform Tija after the death of relations which is also a custom peculiar to Musalmans. They generally profess to be Hindus; because their marriage and a few other ceremonies conform chiefly to the Hindu modes."

In Marwar there are two divisions of the Bhangis viz. the Loharis and the Multanis who intermarry with each other, observe seven phēras, and use Chowri on occasions of their marriages. They, however, differ in their funeral ceremonies. The Loharis perform the Chelam or the ceremony of fortieth day after the death of a relation like the Musalmans, whereas the Multanis observe Barhivan or the twelveth day ceremony after the Hindu custom.

The Bhangis have for their priests, the Sādhis of their own caste, who attend their marriage as well as funeral ceremonies.

The Bhangis may eat the flesh of all dead animals. They eat the leavings of every caste, excepting only the Dhobis and Dholis, whom the Bhangis consider very low and will not eat food even if it is touched by them. The Bhangis are the lowest of the low, but they rank higher than the vagarant Sansis who can eat the refuse of the Bhangis.

The chief peculiarity with the Bhangis of Marwar is that they will never eat food, if invited in a public feast, though they will readily accept the leavings of other guests. It is said that when on the demise of the late Maharaja Takhat Singh, all the people of Marwar were fed (the ceremony being known as Sher-sarni) the Bhangis alone could not be induced to take part in it unless offered with the golden broom and basket or Jharu-tokra.

The Bhangis do not marry in their own clans. They also do not marry the sister of a living wife, but a wife has the option of leaving her husband, and choosing another man, in which case the former husband is paid from Rs. 150 to Rs. 140. Any illegitimate issue among the Bhangis causes the expulsion of its mother from the community, but in case the real father is traced, the latter is held responsible for the maintenance of the newly born child and its mother for life.

The Bhangis are divided into various clans of whom the chief found in Marwar are—

1	Lakhan	...	8	Chhawa	...	15	Pamat	...
2	Goyal	...	9	Sarsar	...	16	Dhikiya	...
3	Jangra	...	10	Bünd	...	17	Chavaria	...
4	Tamboli	...	11	Günd	...	18	Chandanaliya	...
5	Jajoran	...	12	Rél	...	19	Channaliya	...
6	Danoriya	...	13	Teje	...	20	Gujrati	...
7	Ugach	...	14	Zinda	...	21	Mattu	...

22 Bhiman ...	29 Kilana ...	36 Miga ...
23 Thagaria ...	30 Dharu ...	37 Kareliya ...
24 Dhanwar ...	31 Umarwal ...	38 Pandat ...
25 Gudwar ...	32 Changra ...	39 Bharya ...
26 Hatwar ...	33 Chahan ...	40 Channariya ...
27 Daora ...	34 Gamal Guch,
28 Adiwai ...	35 Sonkhat ...

PERSONAL SERVICE

Under this head are returned the Golas and Nazars who form a large proportion of personal attendants to Rajput chiefs and nobles. Their total number in Marwar according to the present Census is 60,429, of whom 31,691 are males and 28,738 females.

THE GOLA.

The Golas literally signifying slaves are the illegitimate offsprings of Rajputs upon whom they attend as hereditary servants. They are found in almost all the parganas of Marwar, and include as many clans as those of their fathers. Those connected with the ruling family occupy a superior position, and are not associated in any way with those attached to the lower grade Matsadies. They mostly follow the customs of Rajputs, and Nata is permitted among them.

In Jodhpore, the Golas are generally called Sheri-Sirdar, probably for their mostly residing in the city. They are commonly known by the name of Chakars, and are also styled Daroga, Khawas, Pashan, or Chela. In the western part of Marwar, they are generally designated as Wazirs, and in Meywar they are known as Dass.

The Golas are regarded as half-caste, and cannot intermarry with Rajputs. "The Gola," says Col. Tod, "can only marry a Golee, and the lowest Rajput would refuse his daughter to a son of the Rana of this kind." They are with their females, often given as part of dowries in the marriages of chiefs and nobles.

As slaves are generally regarded faithless to their masters, so are the Golas in Marwar. The following saying current in Marwar serves to illustrate their chief characteristic in this respect—

Gola kin sun gun kare ogan gara ap.

Mata unri khapli terah chodah bap.

i. e. a Gola can do no good to any one, he is himself illegitimate, his mother being an immoral woman, and his fathers numbering more than a dozen.

Rajia a well-known poet thus speaks about them—

*Gola ghana najik, Rajputan adar nahin,
Un Thakur ri thik run men parshi Rajia.*

It means that the real worth of that Thakur who keeps Golas with him, and is not much respected among the Rajputs, will be known in time of war.

Sir Henry Elliot, describes the Golas as an inferior caste, and quotes the following contemptuous distich of a popular poetry respecting them—

*Jat, Gadarya, Gujar, Gola.
In charon ka hela mela.*

i. e. the Jats, Gadaryas, Gujars, and Golas, these four are all the same sort of people.

In the estate of Awa in Marwar, the Golas are not allowed to ride on horses. The story goes that once on an occasion of war, a certain Thakar of the Thikana fell down from his horse, severely wounded. His attendant, a Gola-Rajput run away with the horse, giving out that his master was dead. But the Thakar soon after turned out alive, and his Gola was announced to be faithless, and forbidden to ride on a horse.

The females of the Golas are termed Golees. They are chiefly employed as maid-servants, and are, as Col. Tod remarks, "the great cause of loss of liberty." The Golees connected with the ruling families are called Daoris in Marwar. In Jeypore, they are known as Badaran, and in Bundi as Bai. In other places, they are also styled Manus. They are sometimes employed as nurses, but are often admitted into the Zenana as concubines, by the Rajput nobles and chiefs, on payment of enormous sums of money to their parents or husbands. The Daoris thus admitted are called Pardayats meaning those taken into Parda, the technical phrase being Parde-ghalna, also sona-pherana in which case gold is granted to them to be worn on the ankle. They are then not allowed to go out to see their relations. The word Raiji or Rajji is generally attached to their original name. The Pardayats are promoted to be Pásbáns, and they then take their seats just below the Ranis. In Jodhpore, the temple of Kunj-bihariji, the Gulab-sagar tank, and the Girdi-kote, as also the Maila-bagh-palace perpetuate the memory of a Pasban named Gulab Raiji.

THE NAZAR.

The Nazars or eunuchs, as described by Col. Tod, are the emasculated guardians of a seraglio, employed at native courts as attendants upon the wives and concubines of the sovereigns. The custom of employing Nazars as guards to the Zenana Mahals seems to have been borrowed from the Mohamedan Emperors, and prevails only in the states of Jodhpore, Jeypore, and Ulwar. In Meywar, Sirohi, and Bundi which were not much reached by Mohamedan influence, and where the Hindu element chiefly predominates, the Nazars are not employed at all. Even a eunuch attendant of a Rani going from Jodhpore to any of these states is not allowed admittance into the Zenana there.

The Nazars form a separate class from that of the Hinjras, as the former are made eunuch in their infancy, whereas the latter are naturally impotent by birth. Moreover the Hinjras wear the female dress and dance, while the Nazars go in male attire, and are employed as guards to the haram or Zenana.

The Nazars are also called Khaja Saras and are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The Mohamedan Nazars residing in Nagore trace their origin to one Haji Bithal of Mecca.

Formerly these Nazars or Khaja Saras were not only confined to the Zenana Departments, but also held powers in connection with the administration of the states concerned. In Jodhpore, one Har Karan Nazar, flourished in the reign of Maharaja Takhat Singh, and was conferred the highest honors of the day. He was the revenue officer, and wielded authority from the state. The following saying concerning him is still an household expression in Marwar—which means that Bhandari Bahadar Mull, the then Darogha of Hazuri Daftar held authority outside, while Har Karan, Nazar was all in all in the palace—His successor Sukhramji is the present chief Nazar in charge of the Zenana Mahals.

Bahar nache Bhandaryo.—Mahin nache Nazaryo.

A mosque near the Jalori gate called the Eedgah perpetuates the memory of another Nazar named Ilmas.

In Jeypore, the Nazars are called Nadar-Khoja, the word Nadar meaning shameless. One Mohan Nazar is said to have played some important part in that state, and according to Col. Tod had the reins of power in his hands at the death of Maharaja Juggat Singh.

LEAF-PLATE SELLERS.

THE BARI.

The Baris or Rawats as they are generally styled number 4,557 males and 4,378 females. They properly form a class of personal attendants, though their present occupation is to make plates or cups of leaves stiched together with little wooden pegs for the purpose of holding food. Sir Henry Elliot, on the authority of Brahma and Padma Purans, describes them as having been descended from a barber and a female tobaccoconist, but in Marwar, they claim Rajput descent, and trace their pedigree to a younger brother of Rao Dúharji, who being excluded from the Rajput community for having eaten the food left by his elder brother, the Raja, formed the Bari caste. He was joined by his other relations, who became founders of as many subdivisions of the caste. The chief of them are—

1	Duharya	...	5	Déwat	...	9	Punwar	...
2	Sohawat	...	6	Kunwar	...	10	Gour	...
3	Gehlote	...	7	Chohan	...	11	Daiya	...
4	Bhati	...	8	Sisodia	...

The Baris act as servants to Rajas and chiefs, and as they are given leavings of food by their masters by turn or bari, they are called Baridars. In Marwar, they claim payments on two special occasions. Firstly, on the birth of an heir to the throne, as says Col. Walter, an impression of the child's foot is taken by a Bari on a piece of cloth with safron, and exhibited to the aristocracy of Marwar, who reward the Bari liberally for the sight. Secondly, on the demise of any of the hereditary nobles of the State, when the Maharaja pays a visit of condolence to the family of the deceased, the cloth spread for the reception of the Maharaja is generally given to the Bari.

The Baris profess Shaktism, and follow Rajput customs. They eat flesh and drink liquor. Nata is permitted.

In Elliots' Supplemental Glossary, the Baris are said to have proved themselves excellent soldiers in the king of Oudhs' service; and some of them even became Rajas. Mr. Read in his Inferior Races of the North-Western Provinces, describes them as having the reputation of great fidelity to their employers, and quotes the proverb, "the Bari dies fighting for his master."

BETEL-LEAF SELLERS!

— * * × * * —

THE TAMBOLI.

The Tambolis are those who sell pan and betel-nuts. They number 425 according to the present Census.

In Marwar, the Tambolis form a distinct caste, though Mr. Ibbetson regards the term to be merely occupational in the Panjab.

The Tambolis are said to have 84 sub-divisions, but the chief of them found in Marwar are—

1 The Kumblawat	...	4 The Dhamnia	...
1 The Mormat	...	5 The Bhoariwal	...
3 The Pipliwal	...

The Kumblawat Tambolis claim an unmixed origin, and declare Ayudhya to have been their original home. In Marwar, they are chiefly found in Nagore, and intermarry with other Tambolis, who are said to have sprung from Rajputs.

The Tambolis are followers of Gokalya Goshains, and observe the customs of Mahajans, though on occasions of marriage, they do not make presents of jewels to the bride. Their women generally wear lac churas instead of ivory ones. Nata is not permitted.

No Pan grows in Marwar, but it is imported from other countries for daily consumption. In the sandy tract of Marwar called thal the people are generally quite ignorant of its use. A girl belonging to that part of the country, who was married to a man of a rich family, being offered betel leaves, as a mark of courtsey, is said to have indignantly refused the offer, addressing her husband in the following words—Nit nit pan kain thara bap ri bakri hun—which means that she was not a she-goat of his father, so as to go on eating leaves constantly.

PAINTERS.

— * - * - * - * —

THE CHITARAS.

The Chitaras are painters or house decorators, and number 198 in Marwar. They are Hindus as well as Musalmans. The Hindu Chitaras form no distinct caste, and different persons follow this profession retaining their original caste. The Musalman Chitaras, however, form a separate class, and belong to the same stock as that of the Multani Lohars, with whom alone they intermarry. Nata is permitted, but no payment is made to the relations of the deceased husband on that account. The Chitaras may also marry or contract nata in their own clan. Their women generally wear drawers while at home, but when they go out, they wear petticoats, especially of red Lungies.

CHAPTER VI.

CLASS E—Vagrarant Minor Artizans and Performers.

The total population returned under this class comes up to 73,492 souls which bears a percentage of 1.48 to the aggregate number of people inhabiting Marwar.

The chief groups included under this head are arranged as follow—

	Males.	Females.
Earth workers and stone splitters ...	10,486	9,311
Knife grinders ...	182	93
Basket makers ...	1,118	1,521
Hunters and Fowlers ...	21,603	22,135
Acrobats and Jugglers ...	312	181
Unspecified ...	3,615	2935
Total ...	37,316	36,176

EARTH WORKERS AND STONE SPLITTERS.

THE BELDAR.

The Beldars from Persian bel, mattock, are those who are employed in digging earth, quarrying stones, and the like. They are Hindus and are returned in Marwar at 6,493 males and 6,279 females. The Beldars declare themselves to be really the Ods. a wandering tribe, and claim descent from one Bhagirat, who as Mr. Ibbetson describes, "vowed never to drink water twice out of the same well, and so dug a fresh one every day till one day he dug down and down, and never came up again. It is in mourning for him that they wear wool, and in imitation of him they bury their dead even when Hindu, though they marry by the Hindu ceremony." In Marwar, however, they burn their dead. They are said to have been employed by Rama during his campaign to Ceylon in constructing the so called Lanka bridge. They also excavated the Pushkar lake during the time of Nahar Rao Parihar and thus according to Mr. Wilson gave rise to a separate Brahman community called the Pushkarnas, who in commemoration of their origin still worship the Kudali or pickaxe on occasions of their marriages.

Sir Henry Elliot describes the Beldars as being descended from a Tayúr boatman and a woman of the Ahir tribe, but in Marwar they are mostly composed of degraded Rajputs, and their sub-divisions also bear Rajput names.

They worship Chawanda Mata and are much given to the use of liquor. On occasions of their marriage, the father of the bridegroom pays Rs. 60 to the brides' parents. Rs 40 are paid when Nata is contracted. The gots of father and mother are avoided in both the cases. The females of the Beldars are not allowed to wear ivory Churas.

Among the Beldars, a woman named Jasma Odni had been of some renown. She used to live in Malwa, but was employed with her husband, by Sidh Raj Jai Singh of Gujrat, in excavating a tank at Patan. The Raja fell in love with the woman, and desired her to enter his haram. Jasma, however, refused the offer, and committed suicide, pronouncing imprecation upon the Raja to the effect that the tank in question shall never be capable of retaining water, which prophecy is said to have been fulfilled up to the present day.

THE SILAWAT.

The Silawats are stone-masons and builders. Those employing themselves as stone-cutters are called Sangtarash. They also prepare hand mills for grinding corn.

The word Silawat seems to be a corruption of Shipwat literally signifying a follower of Ship-shastar which deals with the art of architecture. The Silawats are also known by the name of Sootardhar from the Soot or thread they generally keep with them for measurement. Sootardhar now forms a term of respect applied to those who supervise the work of masons, corresponding to the English overseer or the Gazdhar of Marwar.

The Silawats are both Hindus and Musalmans, and were returned in Marwar according to the present Census as under--

		Males.	Females.
Hindu Silawats	...	1,576	1,045
Musalman Silawats	...	2,417	1,987

The Hindu Silawats generally do not form a distinct caste, and are composed of Kumhars, Malis or Mehras, who work as builders retaining their original caste.

The Sompuras, however, form a separate community among the Hindu Silawats, and exclusively employ themselves in building temples. They consider themselves Brahmans and wear the sacred Jeneo. They abstain from the use of liquor and meat, and can eat with the Mahajans. They marry in their own community. Their chief clans found in Marwar are—

(1) Balechia	...	(5) Barkana	...
(2) Monawat	...	(6) Kopalya	...
(3) Borawat	...	(7) Gada	...
(4) Kalawat

In Marwar they are said to have come from Somnath in Gujrat and hence their name as Sompuras. They are regarded as well-versed in their art. The famous Jain temple of Aboo is said to have been constructed by them. They are fine painters or artists, and also mould guns.

The Sompuras worship Somnath Mahadeo. Their females wear ivory Churas, and especially use red Ghagra or petticoat on occasion of marriages. Among the Sompuras, a father-in-law and son-in-law cannot eat together, though the brother-in-laws may do so.

The Musalman Silawats of Jodhpore are of the Sunni sect, and belong to two divisions—the Mertia and the Nagori—so called after the names of Merta and Nagore respectively, being the places whence they migrated for the first time in Jodhpore. Both the divisions include a large proportion of converted Rajputs.

The Mertia Silawats have the following sub-divisions—

- | | | | |
|--------------------|-----|---------------------|-----|
| (1) The Khattai | ... | (5) The Chohan | ... |
| (2) The Bhelim | ... | (6) The Sisodia ... | ... |
| (3) The Tajak ... | ... | (7) The Solankhi | ... |
| (4) The Khilji ... | ... | (8) The Bad-Gujar | ... |

Of these the first four clans claim Musalman origin, the remaining being originally Rajputs.

The chief sections among the Nagori Silawats are as under—

- | | | | |
|-------------------|-----|---------------------|-----|
| (1) The Khatri... | ... | (5) The Tunwar | ... |
| (2) The Bhatta... | ... | (6) The Sisodia ... | ... |
| (3) The Chohan | ... | (7) The Khieli ... | ... |
| (4) The Gour | ... | | |

The Tunwar Rajputs profess to have a claim to the throne of Delhi as already described, and the erection of a pillar or Kili at Delhi by Anangpal Tunwar said to have been derived into the earth so deeply as to reach the head of the serpent king, supports the tradition. The fall of the empire is generally attributed to the Kili being ordered by the incredulous Raja to have been dug up. It is in commemoration of this that the Musalman Silawats of Tunwar clan still observe the anniversary of the erection of the Kili, and sleep on the earth on that day instead of on *Charpoy*s. It is also in consequence of mourning for the loss of the empire that on occasions of marriage processions among them the bridegrooms are not allowed to ride on a horse.

The Musalman Silawats follow the usual Mohamedan customs. In the Muffussil, however, they do not marry in their own clan, and also make adoptions from near relations in the absence of male issue. The men do not use Kacha or transitory colours, and the women do not wear lac chura.

KNIFE-GRINDERS.

THE SAIKALGAR.

The Saikalgars are the cutters and sharpeners of steel and iron implements. In Marwar, they are generally known as Khernia. Their number as returned in the present Census is 182 males and 93 females. They form a sub-division of the Lohars or black-smiths, but they do not marry either with the Gadia or the Malvia Lohars. They include several Rajput tribes whose custom they mostly follow. They declare Kanouj to have been their original home, and are said to have accompanied Rao Siaji in Marwar. They worship Shakti, but many among them are the followers of Aiji, who consequently burry their dead. Nata is allowed among them.

BASKET MAKERS!

THE GANCHHA.

The Ganchhas are basket makers, and are returned in Marwar at 1,118 males and 1,521 females. They must not be confounded with the Ghanchis who are oilmen by trade and altogether a separate caste as already described.

The Ganchhas declare that they were originally Rajputs, and comprised nine clans, but only six are found at present. They are—(1) the Solankhi, (2) the Parihar, (3) the Bhati, (4) the Sisodia, (5) the Punwar, and (6) the Rathore.

(They are said to have come into Marwar from Gujrat, but they do not now intermarry with the Ganchhas of that place, as the latter abstain from the use of liquor and meat while those of Marwar do not.

(They are Shivites and worship Bichbra Mata who is said to have protected them when the Mohamedans invaded Gujrat.

(The Ganchhas marry by four phas and recognize widow marriage, avoiding their own clan. In Marwar they also cultivated land, but in Gujrat they deal in grain, and reckon themselves among the Mahajans.

HUNTERS AND FOWLERS.

THE BAORIS.

The Baoris form the chief predatory class in Marwar. They are known by the name of Moghia in Meywar, and are called Bohra in Dhar. They profess Rajput origin, and have clans with Rajput names. They take their name from Bavri or a masonry well. Captain M. J. Mead in a paper read before the Anthropological Society of Bombay, thus writes about their origin—

“A party of Rajputs from Gujrat are stated to have been escorting a Rajputni damsel of high birth to Dehli, where she was to enter the Imperial Zénana. On their way they halted near a large masonry well. A Rajput girl of the place saw the princess, reproached her with the disgrace she was incurring, and pointed out the sad fate before her. Stung with the girls' words, the princess threw herself into the water, and was drowned. Her escort, fearing to proceed or return without her, remained near the well and soon began to commit depredations, which gave them an evil name in the neighbourhood. They were called the Baori-wallas, which in course of time was changed to Baoris.”

In the Panjab, the Baoris are known as Bawariās, and are described by Mr. Ibbetson to be a hunting tribe who take their name from the bawar or noose with which they snare wild animals. In the Mirzapore District, they are said to lead a precarious life, and have a peculiar way of raising their crops. “Before the rainy season commences,” says Mr. Sherring, “timber is cut down in the forest, burnt, and reduced to ashes. When the seed is sown, the ashes are scattered over the ground together with it. This method of cultivation is called bawānra, from which word the tribe appears to have received its designation.”

The original home of the Baoris is said to be in Marwar, but according to Captain Mead they belong to three great divisions, viz.—(1) the Malwi, (2) the Kherāra, and (3) the Marwāra. In the Panjab, they are however, divided into three other sections, such as—(1) the Bidawāti, (2) the Jangali or Kalkamalia, and (3) the Kāmparia, who neither eat together nor intermarry.

The Baoris are Hindus, though of an inferior rank. They wear choli, and Brahmans attend their marriage as also funeral ceremonies. They worship all Hindu deities, venerate the cow, and show reverence to the peepal tree. They eat all kind of flesh except the beef, and are much addicted to the use of liquor. They are also Hindu in dress, and observe the usual Hindu ceremonies on their betrothals and marriages. But they have a dialect of their own which they use while talking among themselves, and which is not intelligible to any one else.

A Baori can marry as many wives as he likes, and widows are allowed to contract Nata. The women generally wear glass Churas instead of ivory ones. Husbands and wives do not address each other by name. The wife is also forbidden to call the name of any other male member of the family older than her husband.

The Baoris are by profession a criminal class, and robbers. But they are at the same time very strict in matters of oath, the most binding one being that sworn on the peepal tree which when once taken is never broken. They also believe in various kinds of omens especially on occasions of their plundering exploits. Captain Mead gives the following account of their omens—

“When a gang is proceeding to commit a crime, the appearance of a small white bird, called malara on the right hand in the morning, and on the left in the evening, prognosticates good fortune. At night, should a jackal be heard on the right hand, it is a bad sign, but if on the left, it is propitious. If one of the party cuts himself by any means and blood flows, the expedition is abandoned, but a hurt where no blood appears is considered of no importance either way.”

The Baoris are noted for their skill in tracking, and form the chief class of Pagis or Khojis in Marwar to take up the foot-prints of robbers when a dacoity or robbery occurs. They are also employed as Chowkidars or watchmen, probably on the principle, as Col. Walter remarks, “to set a thief to watch a thief.”

The past history of Baoris is full of depredations and ravages, but of late, the Darbar has taken practical interest in them and adopted liberal measures to make these wandering hordes a purely cultivating class of people. A separate department has been established since 1887 to exercise effectual control and supervision over the Baoris, and to settle them by offering them land and other necessary assistance required for the purpose. In Marwar, the Baoris now possess nearly one and a half lac Bigahs of land, and are, more and more adopting the agricultural career. The efforts of the last few years show a substantial progress in the work, and the exertions of the Darbar in this direction are fully recognized by the Imperial Government.

THE SANSIS.

The Sansis are a wandering tribe who trace descent from one Sans Mull of Bharutpore. They are, however, regarded by some as being connected with the Gypsies of Europe. Their number in Marwar according to the present Census is 654—males 334 and females 320. Of these, 639 are said to have been born in Marwar alone, the remaining 15 having their birth-place in the Bikanir territory. In several villages of the Jodhpore and Bilará Districts, the Sansis are reported to have a permanent settlement, and engage in cultivation. 289 Sansis have been returned as cultivators, 176 as labourers, and 189 as beggars.

The social standing of the Sansis of Marwar is the lowest possible, ranking even below the Bhangis or sweepers, from whom they beg and whose leavings they eat. They are the hereditary bards of the Bhangis, and their women commonly sing and dance. They show much respect to the Bhangis calling them their Dhanis or masters, and also refer their caste disputes to them, and abide by their decisions. A Sansi meeting a Bhangi generally salutes him by saying Dua-Salam which the Bhangi replies by uttering the words Ram Ram. They, however, regard themselves superior to the Dholis, and never eat food touched by the latter.

The wandering Sansis have no settled homes but roam about in the jungle hunting wild animals. Several wandering families halt together in one place, and form what is called a Dera. They use donkeys for their goods, and also keep dogs, fowls and she-goats. They are habitual thieves, and in the Panjab are notorious as the "worst of criminals," being greatly addicted to cattle-stealing and house-breaking. They deal in animals, and keep donkeys, goats, bullocks and cows. They also employ themselves in castrating animals, especially bulls and goats, and work in grass and reeds. Their chief weapon consists of a cudgel which forms their chief defensive armour and by which they protect themselves in a most remarkable way when hotly pursued.

The Sansis are Hindus by religion and wear a scalp-lock though they rank as out-castes. They worship Be-Mata, and make offerings of sweetmeats to the goddess. They also make sacrifices of goats, and observe the Hindu festivals of Holi and Diwali. They also venerate Nimb, Peepul and Bar trees, and swear upon them. They drink liquor and eat all kinds of wild animals, being especially fond of the fox and Sanda (a kind of lizard.) They also eat carrion, but they never kill a hare, the reason for which as they generally say, is that the animal is called Sussa in Marwar which term corresponds to the name of their ancestor Sans Mull. They are considered to be the most impure among the Hindus and can admit men of other castes to their community, who become Sansis by adopting their habits.

The Sansis of Marwar have two great divisions among them namely (1) the Bija and (2) the Mala—both intermarrying with each other, but not among themselves. They are divided into several clans, the chief as found in Marwar are—

1	Chirdáni	...	10	Dowlia	...	19	Bhúrat	...
2	Chàndula	...	11	Sárdia	...	20	Mochra	...
3	Bopal	...	12	Rádhéna	...	21	Kopuch	...
4	Jaspáli	...	13	Harda	...	22	Raichund	...
5	Ramasni	...	14	Lunga	...	23	Moila	...
6	Ráwar	...	15	Deora	...	24	Hákarya	...
7	Jamália	...	16	Dásáni	...	25	Memad	...
8	Sival	...	17	Hemáni	...	26	Barjáng	...
9	Bana	...	18	Daiya	...	27	Banaoti	...

28	Bithu	...	34	Rājāwat	...	40	Tolāwat	...
29	Samalka	...	35	Kuchráwat	...	41	Munāwat	...
30	Memayat	...	36	Sárun	...	42	Solankhi	...
31	Kálra	...	37	Asnāwat	...	43	Kálak	...
32	Thalya	...	38	Bhogāwat	...	44	Bijāwat	...
33	Himania	...	39	Bindāwat	...	45	Duchiwál	...

The Sansis are said to have a dialect peculiar to themselves, but in Marwar, they generally speak the Marwari language, and also do not form marriage connections with the Sansis of other places. They wear the ordinary dress of the low-caste people. The women wear ornaments on head, ears, nose, arms and legs generally made of brass or zinc. Lac as well as glass Churas are worn. The widows are not allowed to wear ornaments.

Marriages among the Sansis are arranged by the parents of the bride and bridegroom. Betrothals are contracted when any two wandering families belonging to different clans meet together at a certain place, and are confirmed by the exchange of cocoanuts. A sum of Rs. 120 is given by the father of the boy to the father of the girl, which is paid in cash either wholly or partly, the balance being compensated by the offer of donkeys or dogs. There is no fixed month for marriages among the Sansis like high caste Hindus and they are performed at any time at the option of the contracting parties. No Toran or Chowri is used on the occasion, but a wooden pole is erected in the middle, and a mat of reed grass hung on it, round which the bride and bridegroom walk together seven times. No Brahmans are required to attend on the occasion, the ceremony of Guth-jora or joining the garment being usually performed by the sister and in her absence by the brother of the bride. After the ceremony of phas, the bride and bridegroom sit together and partake of the nuptial dinner. A bread is brought in a dish and divided into fourteen parts which the bride and bridegroom eat together. Then the Neota is collected from the relations and given to the bridegroom who afterwards takes the bride to his home. (No flesh is eaten on the marriage day, nor any animal killed for the purpose. The dower of a bride generally consists of an earthen ass, an earthen pot, a living donkey with two bags, and a brass or wooden dish. In the Panjab, the Sansis are said to have a peculiar way of performing their marriages, where as Mr. Ibbetson describes, "the bride is covered by a basket on which the bridegroom sits, while the nuptial rites are being performed."

(Among the Sansis of Marwar, widows are not allowed to remarry, though one can keep the widow of his deceased brother by way of Nata.) They seem to have a great regard for the chastity of their women. If a Sansi is found having an illegal connection with a married woman of his own clan, he is at once excluded from the community, and remains so for a year or half, after which period he is required to give a dinner to his caste fellows.

This fine is not considered enough, and the man is doomed to additional physical labour. He is taken round with a bundle of old shoes belonging to his Biradri people on his back, and is repeatedly hit by loafs of bread which are prepared for the purpose and then powdered and made into a sweetmeat called Choorma. This kind of sweetmeat is termed Dohar-Kuta from the fact that the breads in order to be made into the sweetmeats, are powdered in the Dohar or a piece of cloth belonging to the man concerned. No such punishments are however, awarded when the woman in question belongs to a different clan in which case only small fines are inflicted.

The funeral ceremonies of the Sansis are almost the same as among other Hindus. The dead are burned, the children only being buried. They perform the Tija, but observe no ceremony on the twelfth day. The bones are kept buried under ground unless the Mosar or funeral dinner is given when they are thrown in a river.

THE THORIS.

The Thoris, described by Col. Tod to be "the sons of the devil," are the professional thieves of the Rajputana desert. They claim Rajput descent, and are divided into twenty clans bearing Rajput names, which intermarry. They are the same as the Aheris, though the latter designation is a term of contempt generally applied to the lower class. Thoris, who solely live as hunters and fowlers, and go on begging with the Bhangis whenever an eclipse takes place. The Thoris, as is generally believed, have no connection with the Banjaras, although as Col. Tod says, they are equally the careers in the Rajputana deserts, and are likewise called Nayaks. According to Sir Henry Elliot, they have proceeded from the Dhanaks. They rank with the Baoris, and other wild tribes. Their movements are watched and they are more and more persuaded to agricultural pursuits. A large number of them now cultivate land and many work as labourers or grooms.

The Thoris profess Hinduism and worship local deities such as Pabuji and Khetarpal. They drink liquor, and eat all kinds of carcases. Their priests are the Gurras who attend their marriage and funeral ceremonies. They permit Nata, and burn their dead.

A Thori by name Rajia who belonged to Bndla-Gudah in the Pali District, has of late, been a great religious reformer among the members of the Criminal Tribes of Marwar. He is a Kabir-punthi, and devotes his life in preaching to the Minas and other people of adjoining places whom he admits as his disciples by granting them a Kanthi or a garland of beads. His principal doctrines are—(1) not to kill an animal, (2) not to use wine or flesh, and lastly (3) not to commit theft. His preachings have greatly influenced the mind of the people, and a large number of Minas are among his followers, who have altogether given up the use of liquor, and consequently ceased from committing crime.

THE BAGRIS.

The Bagris take their name from residing in the Bagar or jungle. They are a wild tribe, who as Captain Mead says, "subsist on birds and beasts they snare or kill in the chase, and on roots, fruits and other jungle products." According to Col. Tod, they are one of the aboriginal races of India, but they consider themselves to have been originally Rajputs, and are divided into several clans known as Punwar, Parihar, Koli, Charan, Bhati, and Dabi.) Their chief weapon consists of a match-lock. They cultivate land, and are generally employed to keep watch over the fields of corn at the harvest time. They are included under the criminal tribes, and kept under proper vigilance. In Mallani they are said to act as veterinarians, and also operate on the human body in cases of lithotomy. In Central India, they are described by Sir John Malcolm as the professed robbers and thieves who migrated there with the Baoris from the Western parts of India. They are said to be very expert and bold in thieving and plundering, but at the same time true to their salt, and ready to serve any one as mercenary soldiers.

The Bagris are Hindus of the lowest caste, and worship Shakti. They drink liquor and eat all kinds of flesh. They marry among themselves, but avoid their own clan. The Gurras act as priests, their fee varying from half to one rupee. Betrothals are contracted among them by binding a thread round the bride's wrist, but they may be rejected at the option of the parties. Their marriage ceremonies comprise seven pheras, and the dower of the bride consists of a certain number of goats and calves. Nata is permitted among them. They burn their dead with face towards the north, and duly observe the ceremonies after the third and twelveth day.)

The men are generally strong and robust, and are distinguished by their greenish dress and the match-lock they keep with them. Their women wear the ordinary dress and rarely make use of any ornament.

ACROBATS AND JUGGLERS.

THE NAT.

The Nats, as described in Wilson's Glossary of Indian Terms, are "a tribe of vagarants who live by feats of dexterity, sleight of hand, fortune telling and the like, and correspond in their habits to the Gypsies of Europe." They are generally rope-dancers and expert gymnasts, performing various clever antics with long bamboos. Their chief music is the drum upon which they play while giving performances. They train their children in the art from their very infancy, and their women generally styled Kabutris also perform as acrobats, though this is not the case with the Nats of Gujrat, whose women do not perform Tamasha, but generally beg. The Gujrati Nats do not marry with the Marwari Nats. A Nat woman by name Sun-Chari is said to have formerly given an excellent performance on ropes in Jalore, and would have obtained half the Raj of the district from the then Sonigra chief of the place, had not the ropes been cut through the intrigues of the Rajas' officials, which caused the head-long fall of the actress resulting in her death. A cenetoph erected in her memory still exists on a hill in Jalore, and her descendents now comprising about fifteen families are known as Gulab-ka-Tola.

The Nats, in order to have the limbs of their body soft and flexible make use of oil to a large extent, both internally and externally. Even their women, on occasions of child-birth excessively use oil during their confinement, just as other Hindu women use Ajwayan (a kind of aniseed). There is a saying current among them—Tel jitna khel—meaning the more oil is used by one, the more he is able to give performances. They especially worship Hanuman, probably because, as Mr. Ibbetson remarks, of the acrobatic powers of monkeys.

The Nats roam about in the country, each family being called a Dera. Two or more families joined together form a Tola. There are several Tolas among the Nats of Marwar known under different designations, such as the Hiran-baz the Phul-baz &c. who intermarry, but no marriages can take place in ones own Tola. In the Panjab, their different tribes are said to be governed by a Raja and Rani or King and Queen like the Gypsy tribes of Europe.

The Nats drink liquor and eat flesh. They have no priests or Gurus, but manage all their ceremonies by themselves. On occasions of their marriages, they erect two wooden poles, and hang the Toran on them, round which the bride and bridegroom perform pheras. No nuptial fire is burnt, though the ceremonies of Gath-jora, and of Hat-leva are duly observed. In the North-Western Provinces, the Nats are said to give their daughters in marriage to the Bahrup-Banjaras without receiving their daughters in return. Nata is also permitted among the Nats on some payments made to the deceased husband's relations, but no money is given if one marries the widow of his brother.

The Nats bury their dead not in an upright posture, but with sides changed, and observe due ceremonies on the third and twelveth day.

The Nats generally wear trowsers, some also use tight Dhoti usually known as Kachhia, and wear garlands of corals or Mungas in their neck. The women generally wear brass ornaments.

The Bazigars or the Badis as they are often called are supposed to belong to the same class with the Nats, though the latter term more properly denotes the name of an occupation rather than of a caste. In Marwar, the Bazigars generally comprise the Jugglers, the Bear-exhibitors, and the Monkey-exhibitors. Many maintain themselves by showing various other performances to the public.

CHAPTER VII.

CLASS F.—RACES AND NATIONALITIES.

The principal castes and tribes having their home in Marwar have been described in the previous pages. The present Chapter deals with the Races and Nationalities found in Marwar, who chiefly comprise the Tribal Communities of Foreign Asiatic origin or reputed descent. The total figures returned under this class aggregate 38,681—(Males 22,593 and Females 16,088) which form more than a sixtieth part of the total population of Marwar.

The chief tribes returned under this head may be noted below—

		Males.	Females.
Shekhs	...	16,782	11,720
Pathàns	...	4,871	3,500
Mughals	...	729	753
Makranis	...	69	42
Wilaitis	...	58	34
Total	...	22,509	16,049	38,558
Native Christians	...	43	12
Parsis	...	21	17
Sikhs	...	20	10
Grand Total	...	22,593	16,088	38,681

THE SHEKH.

✓ Of the total Musalman population of Marwar, the Shekhs are very numerous. They form a mixed class, comprising the original Mohamedan immigrants as well as the Noq-Mushims or the new converts of Indian descent, who are generally styled the Shekh-Sidkhis, i. e. the true believers in the Prophet. The word Shekh literally signifies a Sardar or a chief, but is now degraded in its use, being largely assumed as a title by the inferior and out-caste classes of the converted Musalmans who have no real claim to it. Mr. John Beams in his remarks on the Mohamedans of the North-Western Provinces thus comments upon the word.—“ By this title we ought strictly to imply those Musalmans who, on the one hand, are neither Saiyads, Mughals, nor Pathàns, and on the other are not Hindus converted to Islām. The Shékh, properly so called, is the lowest class of the descendants of the invaders. He is often of Afghán descent, though his forefathers were not of sufficient social standing to acquire the title of Khan. There is also much Persian, Bokhariot and Turki blood in his veins.”

Generally speaking the word Shékhi is applied to the descendants of Ali from his other wives than Fatma, the offsprings of the latter being distinguished by the title of Saiyad. There are also other sub-divisions included under the Shékhi tribe, the chief as found in Marwar are—

(1) the Qureshi, (2) the Siddiki, (3) the Fúrukis, (4) the Usmani, (5) the Unsari, and (6) the Shebàni.

They are chiefly found in the eastern part of Marwar, though in a very limited number, a large proportion of the tribe being comprised of the Indian converts.

The Qureshis are said to be the descendants of an Arab gentleman named Nazrin-i-Kitana who, on account of his great fame, had got the title of Quresh. The prophet Mohammad also belonged to the same clan. The Siddikis, who must not be confounded with the Sidkis as noted above, claim descent from Abu-Bakar. The Farukis are descended from Umar, and the Usmanis from Usman. The Unsari, meaning auxiliaries was, as Mr. Ibbatson remarks, the title given to the believers of Medina who welcomed Mohammad after his flight from Mecca. There are no Mahajirins in Marwar i. e. the descendants of those who accompanied Mohammad in his flight from Mecca.

The Shékhs belong to the Sunni sect, and are mostly soldiers, the word Sipahi, as Col. Walter remarks, being used in Marwar as a Mughal word to designate a Mohamedan. Many among them follow trade and also cultivate land. Their women usually observe Parda.

THE PATHAN.

Opinions vary as to the origin of the Pathán tribe. Some say they are of Afghán origin, and they call themselves Bani-Isrâel, claiming descent from Saul, the first Jewish King, while according to others, they are said to have been descended from an Arab hero named Malik Dani, who settled himself in Afghanistan, and was styled Pathán for the many gallant deeds he had performed. The tribe is divided into numerous sections called after the names of their leaders or founders with an addition of the word Zai or Khel.

The Patháns of Marwar mostly belong to the Kákar clan, the Nághar and Pané who abound in Jeypore and Hyderábad, being also found though to a small extent. The chief sub-divisions of the Kákar Patháns in Marwar are the Khadar-Khel, the Táran-Khel &c., while those of the Nághar are the Parand-Khel, the Khája-Khel, the Nathu-Zai and the Malik-Zai. The Pané Patháns have their following sections—the Musa-Khél, the Mohamad-Zai, the Lalak-Zai, the Yusuff-Zai the Usmán-Zai &c.

There are also Sarwanis, Lodis, and Maswanis who claim Pathan origin on their mother's side. The Sarwanis and Lodis are the descendants of Matti, the sister of Dumar whose daughter was named Maso, from whom the Maswanis are descended.

The Kákar, Nāghar, and Pane Pathans marry among each other, and claim a higher social standing than the Sarwanis, Lodis, and Maswanis.

✓ The Pathans belong to the Sunni sect, and their chief occupation is military service. They are always known by the affixed title Khan, which many ambitious plebians, as Mr. John Beams remarks, often adopt as a stepping-stone to that of Saiyad. ✓ In Marwar, they generally speak the Marwari language, their mother tongue being Pashto.

THE MUGHAL.

The Mughals form one of the four great divisions of the Musalman population of India, but in Marwar their number is comparatively smaller than that of the Shekhs or Pathans. They are the descendants of the companions or followers of the Tartar conquerors of India. They are generally known by the title of Beg affixed to their name, and often use the prefix Mir or Mirza which is a shortened form of Amirzada, meaning the son of a noble. Those belonging to the royal families style themselves Shazadas or Salatins.

The Mughals have several sub-divisions among them, the chief as found in Marwar are—

(1) the Barlas, (2) the Chaghatta, (3) the Gurgani, (4) the Punj-sheri, (5) the Wala-shahi, (6) the Kazal-bash.

They intermarry among each other, and also with the Shekhs and Pathans. They show much respect to the Saiyads, and do not marry their daughters, though they freely give their daughters to them. Widow marriage is not allowed among them.

The Mughals are Sunnis as well as Shias. The Kazal-bash section chiefly belongs to the latter sect. In Marwar, they follow different occupations. Some are physicians, others are employed as Sepahis, but a few follow trade.

THE MAKRA NI.

The Makranis take their name from Makràn. They are the true Biloch, and Mr. Ibbetson gives the following account of their early history.

"They are descended from Mir Hamzah, a Qureshi Arab and an uncle of the prophet, and were settled at Halab or Aleppo, till siding with Husen, they were expelled by Yaziz the second of the Umeiyid Caliphs. This would be about 580 A. D. They fled to the hill country of Kirman in Persia, where they lived quietly for some time, and so increased in numbers that the King became desirous of binding them to himself by ties of marriage. He accordingly demanded a wife from each of the forty-four bolaks or tribes into which they are said to have been divided, though all traces of them have long since been lost. But their fathers had never given their daughters in wedlock to a stranger, and they therefore sent forty-four boys dressed up in girl's clothes, and fled before the deception could be discovered. They moved south-eastwards into Makran or the tract between Afghanistan and the coast of the Arabian sea, then but partially inhabited, and there finally settled in the country which is now, known as Bilochistan."

In Marwar, the Makranis date their migration from Gujrat from the time of the late Maharaja Takhat Singh, and are employed since then as Foreign Mercenaries. Their chief clans in Marwar are—

(1) the Gichki, (2) the Kaniz-zai, (3) the Halla-zai, (3) the Mulla-zai (5) the Darazak, and (6) the Rind.

The Gichkis occupy a higher social standing, and they take daughters in marriage from other clans, but do not give their daughters to them. The Darazaks are, on the contrary, considered a low class. They cannot marry with other clans though they give their daughters to them. The remaining clans intermarry among each other, and also with the Shekh or Pathàn tribes of Marwar.

The Makranis belong to the Sunni sect, and are said to be nomad in their habits, though in Marwar, they generally keep their women secluded and are very jealous of their honor. They speak the Makrani language which is connected with the old Persian.

THE WILAITI.

The Wilaiti is the name given to the Afgháns or more properly the people of Afghánistan who are employed in Marwar as Foreign Mercenaries.

The Afgháns are a distinct race from the Patháns, though both the terms are generally considered synonymous. Mr. Ibbetson thus describes them.

"The original Afghans are a race of properly Jewish or Arab extraction, and they together with a tribe of Indian origin with which they have long been blended still distinguish themselves as the true Afgháns, or since the rise of Ahmad Shah Durrani as Durranis. Thus the Afghán proper includes firstly the original Afgháns of Jewish race whose principal tribes are the Tarin, Abdali or Durrañi, and Shirani, and secondly the descendants of the fugitive Gandharis who include the Yusuff-Zai, Mohammad, and other tribes of Peshawar. The true Patháns are apparently of Indian origin. Their language is called Pashto or Pakhto and they call themselves Pakhtana or Pakhto-speakers, and it is this word of which Pathán is the Indian corruption."

The Wilaitis of Marwar belong to the tribe of Yusuff Zai, Afridi and Khátak who form the chief sub-divisions of the Pactyan nation. The Yusuff-Zai belong to the Khakai section of the Kandhar colony of Gandharis, who absorb several divisions among them. They are said to be very jealous of the honor of their women. The Afridis are said to have been descended from Burhán, son of Kakai, grandson of Karlanri, by his son Usman surnamed Afridi. They are divided into five clans of which the Ula-Khél is the largest. They are described as being very barbarous and uncontrollable. The Khátaks trace descent from Lukman surnamed Khátak whose sons Turman and Bulak founded the clans known as the Tarkai the Tarkai, and the Bulaki. They are said to be an active and industrious class of people.

The Wilaitis are bigoted followers of the Sunni sect and hate the Shias to an extreme degree. They are on the whole, a very dangerous class of mercenaries, and are said to have, from time to time, given much trouble in the Deccan and Central India. Their number is now being gradually reduced in Marwar.

THE CHRISTIAN CONVERTS.

The Christian Converts or the Native Christians as they are generally called comprehend both Roman Catholics and Protestants. In Marwar the Roman Catholics outnumber the Protestants, the former being mostly employed in the state band. A few families are engaged in some department of the Jodhpore Bikanir Railway. Two or three families are employed as carpenters, and in connection with the Mission Hospital and Dispensary, three Christian families find work.

THE PARSIS.

The Parsis take their name from Persia, their original country whence they migrated and settled in Bombay in the 14th century. They claim descent from king Jamshed, and are divided into two sects known as Kadimis and Shanshahis, who intermarry among each other.

The Parsis follow the Zoroastrian religion, worship God, and revere the sun, the moon, the water, and fire. The offerings made by them consist of sandal wood and other fragrant drugs which are burnt in the fire, and of throwing sugar and flowers into rivers. They wear the sacred Jmeo which is composed of 72 woolen threads. They observe no distinction in eating and drinking. Acts XV and XXI of 1865 regulate respectively the law relating to marriage and divorce, as well as the mode of succession and inheritance among the Parsis. Intermarriage among any other community is forbidden and is unknown.

The Parsis are found scattered all over the globe, and though forming a small nationality in India, they occupy the foremost place as philanthropists and social reformers. The names of Sir Dinshaw Manackji Petit, Mr. Behramji M. Malabari, and lastly of Mr. Dada Bhai Naoroji, the first Indian subject of the Queen to enter Parliament well deserve a place among the noted Indians.

THE SIKH.

The Sikhs number very few in Marwar, and consequently require no remarks. The religion is peculiar to the Panjab, where it is said to have been founded by Baba Nanak, and developed to its present state by his successors, the nine Gurus. The Sikhism enjoins the worship of one God only and positively condemns all caste distinctions. The use of tobacco is strictly prohibited. The few Sikhs found in Marwar belong to different castes and are employed in the Raj service.

